Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheep quota applications his Department administered during 1993 to the nearest convenient estimate; and how many civil servants are allocated to this task.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 December 1993]: The Scottish Office agriculture and fisheries department has allocated sheep quota to 22,300 individual producers during 1993 and processed 1,700 applications to transfer and lease quota for the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme year. The number of staff working on these tasks has varied according to the timing of the application processes and the volume of inquiries received from producers or others on their behalf.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received from (a) farmers, (b solicitors and (c) hon. Members concerning complaints in the administration of the sheep quota system.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 December 1993]: The Scottish Office agriculture and fisheries department receives several hundred inquiries from producers or their agents each week concerning various aspects of the sheep quota system. Very few have lodged a complaint against the administration of the quota system although some may have experienced difficulties contacting departmental staff by telephone during certain peak periods. I have received letters from 14 hon. Members concerning sheep quotas, three of which have referred to complaints about administration.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many personalised letters he has written to people in East Lothian and Berwickshire, respectively, seeking representations in support of his plans to establish a new local authority covering part of East Lothian and Berwickshire.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1993]: None.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the response from Scottish Enterprise Tayside to his consultation document on restructuring Scottish local government.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1993]: Scottish Enterprise Tayside has asked that its response to the consultation paper "Shaping the New Councils" be treated as confidential.

Direct Service/Labour Organisations

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many contracts awarded to Scottish local authority direct service/labour organisations have not been subject to the issuing of a notice alleging anti-competitive behaviour; and on how many occasions such actions were taken.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 December 1993]: Information on the number of contracts let to local authority direct service and labour organisations is not held centrally. Thirteen notices have been served to date in respect of anti-competitive behaviour.

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authority direct service/labour organisations, operating contracts in Scotland have achieved the required rate of return since 1988.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 December 1993]: The statutory financial objective has been achieved on 1,017 occasions since 1988-89.

Local Government Administration

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the authorities that have been challenged by his Department, in relation to their internal arrangements for establishing client-contractor splits in order to meet the requirements under statute.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 December 1993]: No Scottish authorities have been the subject of Secretary of State's sanctions on the basis of client-contractor splits.

List D Schools

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much financial support central Government contributed to the revenue costs of list D schools in each of the five years preceding their abolition in 1986.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 December 1993]: The information available shows that the Scottish Office paid grants towards the revenue expenditure of those schools as follows:

1981-82	6,486,300
1982-83	6,631,300
1983-84	5,051,200
1984-85	6,253,600
1985-86	6,425,500

Mink Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many mink farms have operated in each region of Scotland in each year since 1984; and what is the current figure.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 December 1993]: The number of licensed mink farms operating at 1 March on each year is set out in the table. No mink farms are currently operating in Scotland.

Sexual Offences

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans to promote the development in other regions of the scheme operating in Lothian region relating to complaints in sexual offence cases.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 December 1993]: Arrangements to allocate a nominated police officer to support and liaise with the victim are an integral part of the investigation of allegations of sex offences. As such they are operational matters and the responsibility of the appropriate chief constable. I understand however that similar procedures are observed by all eight Scottish forces.

NHS Employees

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines have been issued to health boards concerning the procedures for suspension of national health service employees and the length of time during which formal disciplinary inquiries are carried out.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 December 1993]: Guidance has been issued on disciplinary procedures in connection with the professional conduct or professional competence of hospital medical and dental staff. This includes advice concerning the suspension of a practitioner from duty temporarily. The guidance recommends that the suspension should be confirmed or terminated by the chairman of the employing authority within 14 days. If it is decided that there is a prima facie case of a serious disciplinary nature, an investigating panel should report on the matter to the employing authority within 32 weeks.

No specific guidance has been issued as regards other staff groups.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State, (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the figures in hectares for (a) set-aside; (b) pulses; (c) oil seed rape and (d) cereals for 1989, 1990 and 1991 which were used to calculate the base area in Scotland;

(2) if he will list the June census set-aside figures for Scotland for 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Sir Hector Munro [holding answer 29 November 1993]: The figures used to calculate the base areas in Scotland are as follows:

	1989		1990		1991		3 Years Average
	LFA	Non-LFA	LFA	Non-LFA	LFA	Non-LFA	LFA	Non-LFA

[2] Before submission to the EC Commission in September 1992, these figures were adjusted by switching 34,854 hectares from LFA to non-LFA giving a base area of 160,348 hectares for the LFA and 390,844 hectares for the non-LFA. These figures were further adjusted to reflect the more accurate split betwen LFA and non-LFA arable land established from the IACS returns, and a further 39,303 hectares was switched from LFA to non-LFA giving new base areas of 121,045 hectares for the LFA and 430,147 for the non-LFA. These last figures are now accepted by the EC as the Scottish base areas. Throughout, the total base area has remained constant at 551,192 hectares.

The set-aside figures recorded in the June census for 1989 and 1990 were 29,197 and 44,465 hectares respectively. These figures partly reflect land registered for set-aside and are therefore higher than the area actually set-aside. No specific set-aside questions were asked in 1991.

DEFENCE

IMS Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a fuller description of projects 2, 27 and 59 supplied by IMS Ltd.; if he will describe the nature of the oversight services supplied by MOD UK—project 57; if he will describe the nature of the medical equipment supplied by IMS—project 15; and if he will describe the nature of the engineering equipment supplied by IMS—project 47—to which his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 295-96, referred.

Mr. Aitken: Certain information about the contracts placed under the Jordan defence package has been made public during oral evidence given to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. I can therefore provide, exceptionally, the further information requested by the hon. Member, which is as follows:

Project

2 Tank modifications to improve gun accuracy and range
15 Medical and laundry stores for a field military unit
27 Various explosive ordnance disposal equipment such as mine detectors
47 Mechanical handling equipment and fire fighting tenders
57 Supervision services in respect of Project 54 (Fast Patrol Boats)
59 Machine guns for the Royal Guard vehicle

Export Sales Agreements

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the quantities and value of (a) project 1—120 mm and 105 mm ammunition supplied by Royal Ordnance, (b) project 4—main battle tank spares supplied by Royal Ordnance—to which his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 295-96, relates.

Mr. Aitken: The information contained in my answer of 3 November—Official Report, columns 295-96—was given exceptionally and contrary to the established practice of successive administrations not to release information about individual defence exports. This was because some of the detail of these contracts had been made public during oral evidence given to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. It would not be appropriate to give further details about the quantities and values of these contracts.

International Signal and Control Company

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what applications his Department received prior to 1987 from the International Signal and Control Company of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, for clearance to work with British military contractors in military sales.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no record of any such applications.

Animal Research

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 605, regarding the research use of animals, if he will specify the nature of the research and experimentation carried out on (a) sheep, (b) goats, (c) pigs, (d) miniature pigs, (e) marmosets and (f) rhesus monkeys.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to make available detailed information on the usage of particular species for defence research. Such information could enable a potential aggressor to assess the current state of our medical countermeasures against the threat of attack by chemical or biological weapons. It is not in the national interest to provide such information.

Animal experiments are carried out only when it is judged essential and when no adequate alternative exists. The total number of animal experiments carried out by the Ministry of Defence is about one half of one per cent. of all animal experiments carried out in the United Kingdom.

L85 Mechanical Fuse

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been killed or injured by the use of the Italian L85 mechanical fuse; when the fuses will be replaced and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: There is no record of any deaths or injuries attributable to the use by British service men of the Italian L85 mechanical fuse. There is a continuing limited operational role for this fuse in training, but its use will gradually reduce as the weapon systems for which it is required are withdrawn from service.

Should a further purchase of this type of fuse be required, this will be open to competition in the usual way. As I announced to the House on 23 November 1993, at column 309-10, we will not award any new contracts to the manufacturer of the L85 fuse, Barletti, until the facts surrounding the Gordon Foxley case have been fully investigated.

F3 Tornados

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to initiate legal action against Airwork in relation to the damage incurred in the cost of the modification contract in the F3 Tornados at RAF St. Athan.

Mr. Aitken: A sample of the damaged aircraft is being surveyed to establish the precise extent of the damage and its structural implications. This work is expected to take at least until March 1994. Thereafter the aircraft design authority will be in a position to make recommendations on repair schemes. When these have been costed we will be able to assess the amount of the Department's claim against Airwork Limited. The claim will be presented within the period allowed in law.

Ferranti International

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 54, what consideration he has given to discussing with the receivers of Ferranti International the possibility of bidding for future MoD orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Officials of my Department discussed this with the receivers of Ferranti International at their first meeting on 1 December. There is no objection to their tendering for future defence orders, although naturally our standard criteria for the financial soundness of our contractors would have to be satisfied before a contract could be placed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 54, what information he has provided to the receivers of Ferranti International regarding his policy on the long-term future for the defence industrial base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has provided no such information to the receivers, who have made no request for it.

GEC

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 176, what information he has provided to the management of GEC regarding his future procurement plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Officials of my Department have a standing instruction that, within the constraints of security and commercial confidences, they should be as forthcoming as possible with defence companies about future procurement plans. The management of GEC, as of any other defence contractor, will therefore have been kept informed of these plans through the many contacts between the Department and the company.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 14 December 1993

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mrs. Naheem Ejaz

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what attempts the Home Office made to legally deprive Mrs. Naheem Ejaz of Bracknell, Berkshire, of her citizenship before moving to deport her;

(2) what is the total cost to the taxpayer of the failed attempt to deport Mrs. Naheem Ejaz of Bracknell, Berkshire.

Mr. Charles Wardle: One of the requirements for naturalisation under section 6(2) of the British Nationality Act 1981 is that the applicant is married to a British citizen. Mrs. Ejaz's husband has never been such a British citizen. When this came to light, Mrs. Ejaz was informed that her naturalisation was a nullity. Since her certificate on naturalisation was considered not to have been granted to her lawfully in the first place, it was not thought necessary to proceed to formal deprivation of citizenship under section 40 of the 1981 Act.

It is not the practice of the immigration and nationality department routinely to record the administrative costs of individual case handling. The cost of detaining Mrs. Ejaz prior to her planned removal in September 1992 was £550. The legal costs in her case have not yet been finally determined.

Sexual Offences

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring the sentences available for non-consensual buggery in line with those for rape.

Mr. Mclean: The law in this area is kept under review, but there are no current plans to amend it.

Overseas Police Training

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what foreign police personnel are at present on training programmes with police forces in the United Kingdom; and if he will list each country, the number of personnel involved and the courses they are taking.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I regret that this information is not available.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the police operation against the anti-M11 link campaigners in Wanstead on 7 December.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the additional manpower costs of the operation were £97,532. Information on the cost of support services and other resources involved is not available.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers and from which divisions were involved in the operation against M11 link road protestors in Wanstead on 7 December.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 371 officers from all parts of the Metropolitan police district were involved in the operation.

Shotguns

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many shotgun certificates were on issue at 31 December in each year from 1985 in each police force area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Statistics of shotgun certificates on issue in each police force in England and Wales have been published annually since 1986 in Home Office statistical bulletins "Firearm Certificate Statistics"—prior to 1991, "Statistics on the operation of the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988"—copies of which are available in the Library. Figures for 1985 are not readily available by police force area.

The bulletin issue numbers are as follows: 2/88, 33/88, 18/89, 26/90, 23/91, 19/92, 23/93.

Prisoners' Work (Pay)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consideration he has given to establishing projects for prisoners' work to justify a competitive wage of a nature to enable them to contribute to the costs of their keep, their families and victim support;

(2) what plans there are to review paid work undertaken by prisoners in gaol.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Lady Olga Maitland, dated 14 December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about paid work undertaken by prisoners in jail.

A high priority for the Prison Service is to ensure that prisoners participate in active and demanding regimes centred on work, training and education. Improvements in the quantity, quality, productivity and realism of work form an important part of the Service's plans.

Prisoners are paid for engaging productively in work and other activities. This includes participation in education and training programmes, manufacturing goods in prison workshops and duties directly contributing to the running of an establishment such as cleaning and working in prison kitchens.

To extend the range and quality of work available pilot schemes are in progress where prisoners are paid closer to market rates. The wider introduction of higher rates of pay for prisoners as suggested in the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice, the Way Ahead for the Prison Service in England and Wales" is under consideration.

It may be possible in the longer term to increase pay for productive work more generally. If so payments would be made from increased wages towards accommodation and maintenance costs in prison, compulsory compensation payments to victims and maintenance payments for family and dependents outside. Currently the Secretary of State has a legal obligation to meet the costs of imprisonment for all prisoners.

Elderly Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prison inmates held in prisons in England and Wales were over the age of 80 years as of 1 December.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 14 December 1993:

Inmates over 80 years of age in prison service establishments

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of (a) men and (b) women in Prison Service establishments who were over the age of 80 years on 1 December.

The lastest available information is for 31 October 1993. On that date there were four inmates (all of whom were male) aged over 80 in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions his Department has entered into with Opposition parties over the recent appointments of persons to the Horserace Betting Levy Board;

(2) what are the reasons for and criteria behind his decision to reappoint Mrs. Anna McCurley to membership of the Horserace Betting Levy Board;

(3) if he will list the necessary qualifications and qualities necessary for an appointment to membership of the Horserace Betting Levy Board.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have had no discussion with Opposition parties about recent appointments of members to the Horserace Betting Levy Board. The Government-appointed members of the levy board are expected to have skills relevant to the work of the board, which this year included trying to reach agreement on the levy payable by bookmakers.

Mrs. McCurley has wide experience of the board's work and her commitment to its affairs is valued by the chairman and the Home Secretary.

Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what analysis his Department has made of the relationship between the level of house burglaries in England and Wales and the levels of unemployment, since 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what analysis his Department has conducted into the relationship between the level of car crime in England and Wales and the levels of unemployment since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: Work on these subjects was covered in the Home Office research study "Trends in Crime and their Interpretation" published in 1990. The study found that, once the strong effect of personal consumption growth on car crime and household burglary were taken into account, no separate relationship with unemployment could be identified.

Bodybelts

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) after what period of detention in a bodybelt a prisoner is entitled to a review of the situation;

(2) in which prisons bodybelts are allowed to be used;

(3) for what length of time prisoners are allowed to be detained in a bodybelt.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 14 December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the conditions governing the use of body belts.

Prison Standing Order 3E sets out the general condittions applying to the use of force, special accommodation and mechanical restraints, including body belts, in the management of violent prisoners.

Body belts may be used in any prisons, as an exceptional measure.

The use of the body belt must be monitored regularly and be removed as soon a there is no longer a risk of self injury or violence. An officer must observe the prisoner every 15 minutes. The Medical Officer must medically examine the prisoner as soon as possible after the restraint is applied and certify that there are no clinical contra-indications. The Medical Officer must personally visit the prisoner twice in every 24 hours to review the position. The Governor in charge must either personally see the prisoner before ordering the use of the body belt or immediately after and must see the prisoner at least twice in every 24 hours.

The Standing Order also provides that the Board of Visitors must be notified of any use of a body belt as soon as it is practicable and must approve in writing any continuation of its use for a period beyond 24 hours.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether bodybelts are used in police stations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Bodybelts are not normally used in police stations.

Deportation

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children aged under 18 years have accompanied a parent being deported from the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and what ages those children were;

(2) how many people, accompanied by how many children, were deported from this country in the last year for which figures are available; and what proportion of each of these categories received appropriate immunisations for the country to which they were travelling.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the 12 months to June 1993, about 2,600 people were removed under deportation powers. The other information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 171, what arrangements are made for immunisation to be provided for any deportee who requests it; and what steps his Department takes to inform deportees that they and any children accompanying them are entitled to the appropriate immunisations recommended for the country to which they are travelling.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Where the deportee is detained, vaccinations would be provided, if requested, by the qualified medical staff employed at the place of detention. Otherwise, the deportee would be advised to consult his or her general practitioner.

There are no formal arrangements for the Department to advise deportees about immunisation, but any relevant advice given by the agency issuing travel tickets would be passed on.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what proportion of deportations in the last year for which figures are available (a) a private security firm, (b) more than one private security firm, (c) the police and (d) police and a private security firm were used;

(2) what was the total cost of employing private security firms to participate in deportations from the United Kingdom in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) the last year for which figures are available;

(3) in what proportion of deportations in the last year for which figures are available were (a) handcuffs, (b) luggage tape, (c) bodybelts and (d) other forms of restraint used; and in each case who authorised the use of such restraints.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (a) average, (b) highest and (c) lowest cost to public funds of a deportation from the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member with the available information.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department during how many deportations in the last year for which figures are available drugs have been offered to deportees; in what proportion of those cases the drugs were accepted; what were the drugs involved; if they were administered under the guidance of a qualified medical officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It is, however, not normal practice for drugs to be offered or administered to deportees.

Baroness Thatcher (Security)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 275, what was the cost of police security provided for Baroness Thatcher to sign copies of her memoirs at bookshops within the Metropolitan policing area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is a long-standing practice not to reveal the costs of security operations.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has received from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about reorganising the senior management structure of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Yes. The Commissioner is, with my support, undertaking a thorough and fundamental review of the structure of the Metropolitan police. This review is also taking into account the decisions which I announced on 28 October about the recommendations of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards.

A principal aim of the review is to release and apply the energy of senior staff to meeting operational needs. An early outcome is a proposal, which I have approved, to reduce the number of area commands within the Metroplitan police district from eight to five and to streamline the senior management structure.

This will involve abolishing, in stages, the existing 14 deputy Assistant Commissioner posts and putting each of the five new areas under the command of an Assistant Commissioner. Only two of the existing five central Assistant Commissioner posts will remain, one to deputise for the Commissioner and carry out other functional responsibilities and a second to take overall charge of operational functions organised centrally.

I shall bring forward proposals for necessary adjustments to existing legislation about Assistant Commissioners in the forthcoming Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill.

Fire Authority (Swansea)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which proposed combined fire authority Swansea will be included.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the light of representations, I have received in response to proposals in the White Paper, "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future", of advice received from the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council, and of advice received from Her Majesty's chief inspector of fire services, I have decided that it would be in the best interests of operational efficiency not to split the area of the existing West Glamorgan county fire brigade between different combined fire authorities. I propose, in drawing up combination schemes under the Fire Services Act 1947, to take effect when local government in Wales is reorganised, to include the proposed new unitary authorities of Swansea and of Neath and Port Talbot in the combined fire authority which will cover Mid and West Wales. The Mid and West Wales combined fire authority will include the following unitary authorities:

Cardiganshire (Sir Aberteifi); Carmarthenshire (Sir Gaerfyddin); Pembrokeshire (Sir Benfro); Mid Wales (Canolbarth Cymru); Swansea (Abertawe); and Neath and Port Talbot (Castellnedd a Phort Talbot).

The North Wales combined fire authority will include all those Welsh unitary authorities to the north of that group; and the South Wales combined fire authority will include all those to the south.

Mr. Joseph Elliot

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached as a result of his examination of the circumstances surrounding the acquittal of Mr. Joseph Elliot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It would not be proper for me to make any statement about the particular circumstances of this case. Nevertheless, my examination provided a useful insight into some of the general issues facing the criminal justice system. In particular, it has helped to confirm my belief in the wide-ranging programme of reform on which the Government have embarked. That programme is designed to ensure that people never have cause to feel so exasperated about crime and the response of the criminal justice system that they feel driven to take the law into their own hands; that young people in particular are deterred and helped to desist from a life style of idleness and petty crime; and that the criminal justice system as a whole works efficiently and effectively, allowing courts full and prompt access to relevant evidence. It is vital that people have confidence in the system and are encouraged to come forward to help it work better.

Specifically on the law on self-defence, I am satisfied that the individual should always be able to defend himself, his family and his property, as long as he only uses force that is both reasonable and necessary. I am not currently persuaded that there is a need to change the law. However, I intend to study the Law Commission's recent report on offences against the person very carefully and will be interested in the public reaction to its recommendations.

ENVIRONMENT

Risk and Policy Analysts Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the risk benefit study carried out by Risk and Policy Analysts Ltd; what was the subject of its analysis; and if he will place its report in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: The risk benefit study was commissioned by my Department last year at a cost of £38,000 excluding VAT. The report of the study was published by Risk and Policy Analysts Ltd. under HMSO licence and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The purpose of the study was to develop a methodology for the application of risk benefit analysis techniques to the control of hazardous substances, and to demonstrate the applicability of that methodology for two particular substances.

Housing Investment Programme

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the criteria used by regional Department of the Environment offices for determining the allocation of the discretionary part of the housing investment programme allocation.

Sir George Young: A list of factors that Ministers will bear in mind in allocating the discretionary portion of housing investment programme—HIP—resources was published in May, as a component of the guidance to local authorities on the 1993 HIP round. I have placed a copy of this document in the Library.

Construction Industry Review

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to publicise the review of procurement and contracting arrangements in the construction industry by Sir Michael Latham; what plans he has to extend the review; and when his Department expects to produce a response to the Latham review.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 13 December 1993, Official Report, column 454. The construction industry and its clients are already aware of the review of procurement and contracting arrangements by Sir Michael Latham and he has received many representations from them. The terms of reference are broad and there are no plans to extend the review further. My Department will consider how best to respond to Sir Michael Latham's final report after it has been presented in July 1994, and in the light of its contents and after any necessary consultation.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 30 November, Official Report, column 494, if he will set out the criteria his Department will adopt to judge the best practicable environmental option for the long-term handling of decommissioning wastes from nuclear facilities.

Mr. Yeo: Decision about the management of decommissioning wastes from nuclear facilities will be taken in accordance with criteria relevant at the time.

Temporary Accommodation

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has on the number of families currently in temporary accommodation.

Sir George Young: A total of 56,900 households for which local authorities had accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation were in temporary accommodation on 30 September 1993, the latest date for which a figure is available.

This is the fourth successive quarter in which the number of households in temporary accommodation has fallen; the current figure is some 8,530—13 per cent.—less than a year earlier.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many empty dwellings there are in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: Local authorities in England provide estimates of the number of vacant dwellings in their area in their annual housing investment programme —HIP1—returns. On the basis of these data, it is estimated that there were around 850,000 vacant dwellings on 1 April 1993.

For information about Wales, I would refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for a successor to the environmental protection technology scheme; what level of finance he will make available to the body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced to the House on 7 December, there will be a new environmental technology best practice programme operated jointly by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment. This programme will build on earlier schemes including the joint DOE/DTI environmental technology innovation scheme, previously the environmental protection technology scheme. The budget for the new programme is £16 million over five years, shared between the Departments.

Rural Development

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the outcome of the Rural Development Commission's consultation on the designation of the rural development areas will be announced.

Mr. Yeo: The Rural Development Commission will be announcing the new rural development areas on 15 December. Details of the new areas and copies of the maps will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Local Government

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has decided to take against Warrington borough council following the notice served on the authority on 10 June under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988, in respect of ground maintenance work; and what action he has decided to take against Bradford metropolitan city council following the notice served on that authority on 10 September, under section 19A of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, in respect of highway maintenance work.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has considered carefully the responses which Warrington borough council and Bradford metropolitan city council have made to the notices served on them on 10 June and 10 September respectively, and has today given directions to both authorities. The directions, given to Warrington borough council under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 and to Bradford metropolitan city council under section 19B of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, require the authorities to retender the work which has been the subject of the notices and to seek my right hon. Friend's consent should they wish to reassign this work to their direct services organisations.

Coal Extraction

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish revised planning guidelines on coal extraction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have today published revised planning guidelines for public consultation for England and Wales. Separate consultations are being carried out in Wales. The guidelines deal with both deep mine and opencast coal and with the disposal of colliery spoil.

As foreshadowed in the announcement by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for the Environment, on 25 March 1993, the guidelines aim to strike a balance between the economic importance of this indigenous energy resource and the protection of the environment in a way that is fully compatible with the principles of sustainable development. The draft guidelines set tough environmental tests for the industry. I am confident that, with careful planning and a sensitive approach to local concerns, they can come forward with proposals that contribute to economic growth and provide an environmentally sound foundation for the future. The guidelines are based on three broad principles:

1. It is not the function of the planning system to seek to set national limits on or targets for any particular source or level of energy supply. Nevertheless, low-cost coal is an important indigenous energy resource and it would be against the national interest to prevent its extraction where that can be done in an environmentally acceptable way and consistent with wider environmental objectives, including the principles of sustainable development.
2. It is also relevant to consider whether a particular proposal would itself provide national, regional or local benefits to the community to offset the disturbance occasioned during development and restoration—eg through contributing to United Kingdom employment, the clearance of dereliction or other improvements to the quality of land, the creation of nature reserves or the provision of other benefits.
3. Mineral planning authorities should draw up development plan policies which reflect that approach and must prepare mineral local plans which carry forward those policies and indicate in detail those areas where provision is made for coal extraction and the disposal of colliery spoil, as well as those areas where working or disposal is not likely to be acceptable and where coal resources are to be safeguarded for future working. The preparation of these plans is now an urgent requirement.

Halons

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the United Kingdom will be requesting continued production of halons in 1995 to meet essential users.

Mr. Yeo: The Government do not believe that any production of new halons will be necessary in 1995 to meet essential uses.

We welcome the decision of the fifth meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol not to allow any continued production of halon for essential uses in 1994. This decision reflects the success of halon banking, both nationally and internationally.

The Government commend the work of the Halon Users National Consortium—HUNC—and would urge all halon users to join HUNC to ensure that the bank continues to be a success.

North Sea Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the quality status report of the North sea, prepared for the signatory states to the convention on the prevention of pollution to the North sea.

Mr. Yeo: A pre-print version of the quality status report was considered at the North sea conference meeting which I attended last week. However, there is still some final editing to be done before the document is published in February 1994. Copies will be placed in the Library as soon as the final version is available.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the matters discussed and decisions taken at the ministerial meeting reviewing the convention protecting the North sea against pollution, held in Copenhagen on 7 and 8 December.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 9 December 1993]: The third North sea conference in 1990 decided that there should be an interim meeting of Ministers to review progress on specific questions considered at that conference. This was the meeting that took place in Copenhagen on 7 and 8 December. Ministers or other representatives from Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the European Commission took part. My noble Friend Earl Howe and I represented the United Kingdom. A number of intergovernmental and international non-governmental organisations were also present.

The first task of the meeting was to review the report on the quality status of the North sea, which is taken to include the English channel, recently completed by the North sea task force. The Ministers congratulated the North sea task force on the successful completion of the report. We agreed to refer the recommendations in the quality status report to appropriate bodies for further consideration, but identified some areas for immediate attention—including the impact of fisheries, further controls on tributyl tin, reduction of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbon inputs and a review of the strategy for achieving the goals set by the 1990 conference for inputs of toxic, persistent and bioaccumulative substances.

The second topic was the impact of shipping. We welcomed the achievement through the International Maritime Organisation—IMO—on the initiative of the North sea states, of stricter standards worldwide for oil discharges from shipping, the work under way in the IMO on chemical discharges and the action being taken by the EC Transport and Environment Councils to improve the protection of the seas against maritime pollution. Further action was agreed on shore reception facilities, enforcement and air pollution from ships. On the initiative of the United Kingdom, the Ministers decided on joint efforts to achieve early agreement within the International Maritime Organisation to a convention on liability and compensation for damage caused by accidents involving ships carrying hazardous or noxious cargoes, and to review the question at the 1995 North sea conference in order to find other solutions if progress in the IMO is insufficient.

The third topic was the input of nutrients to the North sea. The 1990 conference had called for a 50 per cent. reduction by 1995 in inputs of nutrients to areas where they were likely, directly or indirectly, to cause pollution. In the case of the United Kingdom, however, only a few estuaries in United Kingdom waters are under investigation as possible problem areas. Inputs from the continent, on the other hand, affect substantial problem areas along much of the continental coast. The meeting noted that the reductions in nitrate inputs to these problem areas by 1995 were, in general, unlikely to be achieved, mainly because of the difficulties of achieving sufficient reduction in agricultural inputs. Ministers therefore agreed on the need for the countries concerned to implement, or improve their implementation, of all the necessary measures. One promising approach was the application of the concept of balanced fertilisation. Agreement was reached on work to define this and related concepts. It proved impossible, however, to reach agreement on the form of a commitment to their application. The United Kingdom and France considered that it was premature to set a fixed date for achieving balanced fertilisation before the concept was defined and it was clear what was involved.

The final topic was the effects of pesticides on the North sea. The meeting concluded that much progress had been made towards the targets for the reduction of pesticide inputs set in 1990, but that for eight substances this progress was insufficient and further efforts were required. On the initiative of the United Kingdom, Ministers confirmed that measures had to address non-agricultural, as well as agricultural, uses of pesticides. The meeting also stressed the need to address all uses of pesticides causing environmental harm and to promote environmentally friendly approaches to agricultural production; steps were agreed to take all this forward.

A copy of the statement of conclusions adopted by the Ministers will be placed in the Library.

Office Space (Housing)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to encourage local government groups to convert unrentable city centre office space into housing; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 December 1993]: We aim to encourage the reuse of vacant office buildings for housing and to be flexible in the application of planning policies and standards. Our planning policy guidance note 3 and the draft explanatory note on affordable housing recommend that local authorities view such applications sympathetically.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to further reduce sulphur dioxide emissions from United Kingdom power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 13 December 1993]: In December 1990, the Government published the United Kingdom's programme and national plan for reducing emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from existing large combustion plants, including power stations. Under that national plan the United Kingdom is committed to reducting sulphur dioxide emissions from existing power stations by 60 per cent. by 2003 compared with 1980 levels. A copy of the plan is available in the Library of the House. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is currently agreeing new authorisations with the generators, in accordance with the requirement of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for best available technology not entailing excessive costs to be applied to emissions from all power plant.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what savings have been achieved in the management of magistrates courts since the publication of the magistrates courts report of January 1989.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Spending on the magistrates courts service has increased every year since 1989. Neither the Government nor the service accepted the recommendation of the 1989 scrutiny of the administration of the magistrates courts that they be run as a national agency. However, the Government accepted that reform was needed and published their own proposals in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" in February 1992. Our objectives are to provide clearer lines of accountability, to secure maximum management co-operation with other parts of the justice system and to guarantee the judicial independence of magistrates and their legal advisers, as well as to yield improvements in the efficiency and effectiveness of the service. The level of savings made will largely depend on the decisions taken by local management on the way they implement the changes.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimated savings on magistrates courts services in London will result from the decision announced in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice".

Mr. John M. Taylor: The purpose of the proposals in the White Paper, including any reorganisation of the service in London, is to provide clearer lines of accountability, to secure maximum management co-operation with other parts of the justice system and to guarantee the judicial independence of magistrates and their legal advisers, as well as to yield improvements in the efficiency and effectiveness of the service. As the efficiency gains which each magistrates courts committee —MCC—achieves by implementing the White Paper reforms will depend largely on decisions taken at local level, it is difficult for the Government to estimate with any accuracy the total savings to be made. However, evidence from those MCCs that have already implemented some of the White Paper's proposals suggest that, within each MCC, the resulting improvements in value for money exceed the transitional costs.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in manufacturing industries in the Greater London area on 1 November 1979 and 1 November 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Regional employment estimates are available only for March, June, September and December of each year. The numbers in manufacturing employment in Greater London were:

Employees in manufacturing: Greater London (unadjusted)

	Number
September 1981	681,000[1]
September 1993	338,000[2]

[1] Employment estimates are not available for Greater London as a separate standard region prior to September 1981.

[2] Latest information available.

Fireworks

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what tests are conducted to ascertain the safety standards of fireworks which are manufactured abroad and imported into Britain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All fireworks that are imported into Britain are required to comply with the tests set out in British Standard 7114 on firework safety. Additionally, fireworks containing certain compositions: for example, sulphur/chlorate admixtures are prohibited under the Explosives Act 1875.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment from which countries pemission to import fireworks to Britain has been refused on the grounds of safety over the last 15 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No country has been banned from supplying fireworks to Britain. Refusals are not aimed at specific countries but at products, or batches of products, that fail to meet the British Standard 7114 standard or equivalent standard. The onus is on the importer to ensure that the requirements are met. The Health and Safety Executive is not automatically informed of rejected products and, therefore, comprehensive figures are not available.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which countries are the major exporters of fireworks to Britain; what proportion of fireworks sold in Britain were manufactured abroad for each year since 1990; if fireworks that have been manufactured abroad have to meet British safety standards; and which countries which export fireworks to Britain have domestic safety standards which do not meet the safety standards for British manufactured fireworks.

Mr. Michal Forsyth: On the first and the second points raised, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 6 December, at column 39, and also to the letter sent to her on 9 December by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade and Technology. All fireworks which are imported into Great Britain have to meet the British Standard 7114 or equivalent standard. We do not have detailed information on the domestic safety standards for fireworks manufactured outside Britain.

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are presently in employment due to the business start-up scheme; and of these how many places have been taken up since 16 March.

Miss Widdecombe: On 15 August 1993, there were 34,900 participants on the business start-up scheme in Great Britian. Over the period 28 March 1993 to 15 August 1993, 15,600 people started on the scheme.

Offshore Safety

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if all the offshore oil and gas safety cases were received by the deadline of 30 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the Offshore Installations (Safety Case) Regulations 1992, all existing fixed and mobile offshore installations operating on the United Kingdom continental shelf were required to submit a safety case to the Health and Safety Executive by 30 November. As at 1 December, all the expected 215 safety cases had been received; 214 arrived on or before 30 November; one was delayed in transit from Norway.

The number of installations originally expected to be covered was 221; however, some of the safety cases received cover more than one installation; for example, unmanned installations linked to another central installation.

One mobile installation was not expected to submit a safety case because it was due to leave the United Kingdom continental shelf before 30 November. Its departure has been slightly delayed because of operating requirements but it will be leaving shortly. It is not being asked to submit a safety case.

WALES

Heritage

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to set up within the Welsh Office a separate department dedicated to heritage provision, including both human and natural heritage; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have no plans to do so.

Wind Power

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many wind power stations there are in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are currently five operational wind farms in Wales.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase the number of wind power stations in the Principality.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Care Provision

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up a monitor of continuing care provision across the country.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The need for continuing care provision is established, arranged and monitored through the local strategies for health and health plans prepared by health authorities, the social care plans prepared by local authorities and, through the Welsh strategies for the mentally handicapped and the mentally ill.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue more detailed guidance to health authorities on future standards of continuing care and respite care for people with dementia.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Guidance has been issued to health authorities in the form of the "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Mental Health, the Health and Social Gain for Older People" publication and the Welsh strategy for mental illness. I have no proposals to issue further guidance to health authorities at present.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review and investigate those areas in Wales where no psychogeriatric continuing care beds are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision of continuing care beds for the elderly mentally ill is a matter for health authorities.

All health authorities in Wales provide continuing care beds for this group with the exception of Pembrokeshire health authority which uses patient beds provided by other agencies within Dyfed.

It is for each health authority to make appropriate provision in line with its own assessment of local need.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the current waiting list for elective surgery at Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available hospital waiting lists are for 31 March 1993, when the waiting lists for all surgical specialties at Ysbyty Gwynedd were 2,286 for in-patient treatment and 460 for day cases.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average waiting time for elective surgery at Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor for the year from April 1992 to April 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The median waiting time for patients admitted from the waiting list for surgical specialties in Ysbyty Gwynedd for the period April 1992 to March 1993 was 49 days.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if all the appeals of nurses in Wales regarding their salary grading have now been determined.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. There are fewer than 100 cases outstanding at employing authority level; some 1,100 at the Welsh appeals committee level; and 228 cases at the national level. I am optimistic that recent discussions between both sides of the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council will shortly result in new procedures for clearing all outstanding cases at the Welsh and national levels.

Health Promotion

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to health promotion campaigns in Wales; and how successful they have been.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Each year, I approve the operational plan of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales and the authority reports on progress at its annual reviews conducted by the Department.

In addition, the authority commissions a number of regular surveys to measure changes in people's behaviour. "Plans for Action 3: The Agenda for 1992-94", published in July 1992, showed progress towards meeting the targets set out in the authority's health promotion strategy, based on surveys undertaken in 1990. A further progress report will be published during 1994-95, drawing upon the results of the 1993-94 surveys. The authority is also due to publish an evaluation report of the Heartbeat Wales initiative during 1994.

Oystermouth Square Development Scheme

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a detailed account of the progress so far of the Oystermouth square development scheme in Mumbles and the next stages of the planning process it needs to go through.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Secretary of State called in for his own determination the application for the Oystermouth square development scheme because it raised planning issues of more than local importance. A public local inquiry was arranged for 30 March 1993, but was postponed to permit the applicant to submit revised plans to take account of the line of a main sewer which would have made the original plans impossible to implement. The revised plans were submitted in June 1993 and were the subject of wide consultation and publicity. The public local inquiry opened on 23 November 1993 and is scheduled to be completed by the end of December. The inspector will then make his report and recommendation to the Secretary of State who will consider them before reaching his decision.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes in the internal structure of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The chairman of the Welsh Development Agency announced in October that he is undertaking a comprehensive review of the agency's organisation and management structure.

While the issues of organisation and management are essentially matters for the agency, its senior management structure is subject to approval and the agency will be submitting its proposals shortly.

Because of the chairman's close involvement in this review and its implementation I have temporarily increased his time commitment from two and a half days per week to four days per week.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will commission an update of the 1985 Welsh housing survey.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The results of the latest Welsh house condition survey are expected to be published in the spring 1994.

Home Renovation Grants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with the Council of the Welsh Districts the consequences of the introduction on 14 January of the new £24,000 ceiling on home renovation grants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My officials have discussed the new upper limit for mandatory grants with representatives of the Council of Welsh Districts.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for each separate piece of land currently owned or leased by the Forestry Commission in Dyfed, Gwent, Gwynedd and Powys (a) its name and (b) its area in hectares; and whether he will place a map in the Library which names and identifies each of these pieces of land.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 8 December 1993, at columns 237-38.

Mr. Alan Trew

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the South Glamorgan health authority in relation to the compensation offer made to Mr. Alan Trew, former unit manager of the Cardiff Royal group of hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has had no consultations with the South Glamorgan health authority on this matter: this is an individual staffing issue entirely for the authority to resolve.

Welsh Historic Monuments

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments annual report and accounts for 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The report has been published today.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about financial provision for further and higher education in Wales in 1994-95.

Mr. Redwood: I intend to make £144·403 million recurrent and £15·615 million capital grant in aid available to the Further Education Funding Council for Wales in 1994-95. This is an increase of 11·2 per cent. over provision in 1993-94. Grant in aid to the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales will be £199·973 million recurrent and £22·840 million capital. Total recurrent resources for the HE sector in Wales will be 6·7 per cent. higher than in 1993-94 and capital resources 6·1 per cent. higher.

These increases in resources will enable the universities and colleges to provide places for substantially higher number of students than the record levels achieved this year, while maintaining the quality of course provision.

I am placing in the Library of the House copies of letters which are being sent today to the chief executive of the funding councils.

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources he will give to the Wales tourist board for 1994-95.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Additional money is being allocated to the Wales tourist board for 1994-95, which will increase the board's budget by 4 per cent. to £14·204 million.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy concerning health and safety.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply. I am advised on health and safety policy by the Health and Safety Commission, HSC.

Government policy is to create a legislative framework and supporting safety systems which protect people from workplace risks. Within that system, the primary responsibility for ensuring the safety of workers and public rests with employers and others who create those risks. The function of the HSC and the Health and Safety Executive —the HSE—is to stimulate action and to set, advise on and enforce standards. It is the Government's policy to ensure the greatest possible value for money is achieved in the work of the HSE.

The HSC is also currently undertaking a review of health and safety legislation, designed to simplify, clarify and update it. The Government expect this to result in improved health and safety standards for workers.

HEALTH

Non-urgent Surgery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to hold records on the names of hospitals and health authorities which have ceased non-urgent surgery; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The organisation of workload and the delivery of contracts are matters for local managers and clinicians. There are no plans to add to the burdens of managers and other staff by requiring additional statistical returns to the centre on this subject.

Influenza Vaccine

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has in future to ensure that there are sufficient supplies of influenza vaccine when demand increases in response to advice on immunisation given by her chief medical officer.

Mr. Sackville: The Department will continue to liaise with the influenza vaccine manufacturers each year, in advance of the issue of the chief medical officer's letter to doctors, to ensure that their production intentions are to total at least the previous year's usage plus an increment for year on year increases in uptake.

The CMO's advice for 1993-94 was the same as for 1992-93. Doses of vaccine distributed in 1992-93 totalled just under 4·7 million. For 1993-94 they have exceeded 5 million despite the fact that a fifth of our expected supply did not become available.

Copies of the letter, PL/CMO(93)13, will be placed in the Library.

NHS Trusts

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the salary of each chief executive of each trust in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Nicotine Patches

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has received from the specialist independent sub-committee chaired by Professor Sir William Asscher on the effectiveness of nicotine patches in helping patients to give up smoking; and if she proposes to accept it.

Dr. Mawhinney: A special committee chaired by Sir William Asscher was asked to advise on whether a decision to remove a particular nicotine patch product from national health service prescription should be reviewed. The committee advised that the product should be available on the NHS at a reduced price. After careful consideration of all the facts, including the advice of the committee, it has been decided that the supply of nicotine patches is not a priority for the use of the limited resources available to the NHS.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recommendations have been made in the publication "Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin", on the availability of nicotine patches on NHS prescription in order to help patients give up smoking.

Dr. Mawhinney: The drug and therapeutics bulletin of 22 November concluded, in an article about nicotine patches, that the use of > "nicotine patches plus advice and support, should be provided by the NHS."

Copies of the bulletin are available in the Library.

Ambulance Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reasons underlie the classification of Doncaster as rural for the purpose of publishing ambulance statistics.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 November at columns 461-62.

Continence Products

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the amount spent on continence products in each year since 1988; and what is the projected spending for 1994, 1995 and 1996.

Mr. Bowis: Expenditure on continence products since 1988 is shown in the table.

Calendar Year	Net ingredient cost £ million
1989	14·0
1990	16·0
1991	20·7

Projected expenditure forecasts for the years 1993 to 1996 are not available.

Notes:

1. 1988 to 1990 data are based on a 1 in 200 sample and cover prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors only.

2. The data for 1991 and 1992 cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

NHS Medicines

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the grounds on which she can reject recommendations by independent expert committees, including the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs and the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances so as to make decisions on the availability of NHS medicines at variance with the expert committees' recommendations.

Dr. Mawhinney: Decisions about whether or not products should be available on national health service prescription are made by Ministers after taking account of expert advice, including any recommendation of the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs and the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances. The basis on which such decisions are made reflect the particular circumstances of individual products. The grounds for deciding to exclude a product from NHS prescription, whether or not this is in line with a recommendation of a committee, are always explained to the manufacturer who is given an opportunity to make representations before the final decision.

Maintenance Backlog

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region the maintenance backlog as at 31 March.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

The figures are the estimated costs, as at March 1993, of clearing outstanding repairs and upkeep required to bring the estate up to a satisfactory physical condition, and now includes an estimate of the cost required to meet statutory and safety standards.

The figures are for all trusts and directly managed units within the regional boundaries

Region	Cost £'000

Worcester Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to call for a report on the use of Concorde flights by staff of Worcester district health authority.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such plans. This is a matter for Worcester and district health authority and the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Mr. A. J. Prescott, for details.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct health authorities to ensure that their publicity on cancer screening includes a statement that those aged over 65 years are not screened routinely but can request both smear and mammography examinations.

Mr. Sackville: The management of local health promotion strategies is a matter for local discussion and decision.

Drugs Company Incentives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about drug companies offering incentives to general practitioners to prescribe their products; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a number of representations following press reports.

The Government deplore any attempt by drugs companies improperly to influence doctors' prescribing practice and are already taking steps to tighten controls on hospitality and other inducements offered by drugs companies. Consultation has just ended on proposed new provisions which would bring breaches of hospitality norms within the scope of the Medicines Act 1968, and render offending companies or their sales representatives liable to criminal prosecution. Regulations to give effect to these proposals will be laid before Parliament shortly.

The pharmaceutical industry in this country has a strict code of practice, probably the strictest in Europe, which lays down very clear guidelines as to what is acceptable behaviour by sales representatives. The Prescription Medicines Code of Practice Authority, which administers the code of practice on behalf of the pharmaceutical industry, is already investigating the allegations which have been made and will report its findings to the Department's Medicines Control Agency. It will also apply appropriate sanctions where allegations are substantiated.

Asthma

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies her Department has carried out of the effect of increasing traffic volumes on levels of asthma among children and adults.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is funding a research project which will examine the health effects, including effects on asthmatics, of the December 1991 air pollution episode in London when the highest recorded peak of nitrogen dioxide occurred.

In addition, the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollution which was established by the chief medical officer last year has set up a sub-group on asthma which will investigate the relationships between air pollution and trends in asthma incidence, and will make recommendations on research relating to asthma and air pollution.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council—MRC—which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is sponsoring some research into factors contributing to the rise of asthma and has set up a working party to examine the aetiology of asthma under the chairmanship of Professor A. J. Newman Taylor. It is considering a range of possible contributory factors to current levels of asthma including air pollution. The Department is represented on the working party and on the MRC committee on toxic hazards in the workplace and the environment, both of which will consider areas of need for further research.

St. Cross Hospital, Rugby

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has so far received about the consultation document issued by the Warwickshire health authority and the hospital of St. Cross in Rugby.

Mr. Sackville: We have received correspondence from a number of people in the west midlands, including my hon. Friend, about this issue.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the consumer in each EC country of a prescription of oral contraceptives.

Mr. Sackville: There is no charge for contraceptives under the national health service in the United Kingdom. Detailed information about arrangements in other European countries is not available centrally.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of elderly people living in residential care homes in North Yorkshire county council are accommodated in (a) private sector homes and (b) council-owned homes.

Mr. Bowis: The latest available figures are for 31 March 1992. The percentage of residents aged 65 and over in staffed residential care homes for elderly and younger physically disabled people, in the North Yorkshire local authority were, 59 per cent. in private homes and 28 per cent. in local authority homes. The remaining 13 per cent. of residents are living in homes run by voluntary bodies.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many units of accommodation are provided by residential care homes owned by North Yorkshire county council; and how many vacancies remain.

Mr. Bowis: The latest figures available are for 31 March 1992. There were 1,797 places in staffed residential care homes for all client groups, of which 267 were not occupied.

Neurosurgery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to her on whether the secondhand magnetic resonance imaging scanner at the Brook hospital has (a) ever been given electrical safety approval and (b) been used on a patient; and whether doctors are able to clear the backlog by using another machine.

Mr. Sackville: The installation and use of the MRI scanner at the Brook hospital is a matter for Greenwich Healthcare national health service trust. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Neville Thompson, chairman of the trust, for details.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now publish the proposed oral health strategy and the White Paper on dental services; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Proposals for an oral health strategy for England and for the future remuneration arrangements in the general dental services will be announced in due course.

Newcastle Hospitals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she proposes to give a decision on the proposals for Newcastle hospitals submitted to her by Newcastle health authority; and whether she proposes to respond in detail to the points put to her in a letter dated 26 November from the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central, (Mr. Cousins).

Mr. Sackville: I agreed to the proposals set out in "The future of health care in Newcastle" on 9 December. On the same day I wrote to the hon. Member informing him of the decision and responding to the points he made in his letter. Copies of the proposals and my letter will be placed in the Library.

Haemochromatosis

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the numbers of British people suffering from haemochromatosis.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available on which to base an estimate.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of publicly funded research programmes studying the connection between haemochromatosis and diabetes; if she will make a statement about the results from such research; and what is the cost of programmes of research.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is not currently undertaking any such studies into the connection between haemochromatosis and diabetes.

The main agency through which the Government conduct biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. We understand that the MRC is not currently funding any research into the connection between haemochromatosis and diabetes.

Active Termination of Life

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she proposes to take following the inquiries by Mr. Richard Turner of the western European department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office into the practice of non-voluntary active termination of life.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office today.

Community Care Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the formula used in calculating the distribution of the special transitional community care grant to individual authorities for 1994-95.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 2 December, at column 707. The methodology of the transfer is set out in LASSL(93)19, copies of which are available in the Library.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the top 10 sales that are categorised as "other" in the health and personal social services statistics for England; and if she will list the income from this category for 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The components of the "other" category were not separately identified in the returns made to the Department. No information was available centrally for 1992 and 1993.

Non-NHS Bodies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1990 the expenditure on the purchase of health care from non-NHS bodies for (a) regions, (b) districts and (c) trusts.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on the purchase of health care from non-national health service bodies for years 1991-92 and 1992-93 is shown in the table. Figures for 1990-91 are not available centrally.

	1991-92 £000	1992-93 £000
Regional Health Authorities	32,746	21,421
District Health Authorities	159,818	187,335
NHS Trusts	12,204	44,543

Source: Annual Financial Returns of regional health authorities, district health authorities and NHS Trusts.
Note: Figures for 1992-93 are provisional.

Baby Foods

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1990 the income from the sale of proprietary baby foods for (a) regions, (b) districts and (c) trusts.

Mr. Sackville: Income from the sale of proprietary baby foods, and so on for 1990-91 is given in the "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for England", 1992 edition, table 2.9 as £12,657,163 In that year, only district health authorities reported an income from the sale of these goods. The information has not been collected centrally in subsequent years, in accordance with our policy of reducing the administrative burden on health authorities and national health service trusts. Copies of the health and personal social services statistics are available in the Library.

GP Fundholders

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many general practitioner fundholders in Bolton (a) are and (b) are not overspent in the current financial year;

(2) how many general practitioner fundholders in Bolton have asked that non-urgent admissions are delayed to Bolton or other hospitals; how many patients are involved; and what is the effect of this on their position on the waiting lists.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally. Regional health authorities are responsible for managing the general practitioner fundholding scheme in their areas.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that no patient will suffer a lack of drugs or treatment because the fundholder is overspent.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional health authorities manage any general practitioner fundholder overspends from within contingency reserves and patient care is unaffected. However, where a GP fundholder overspends because of inadequate budgetary management, the responsible regional health authority will consider the suitability of the practice to remain in the scheme.

Car Mileage Allowances

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much car mileage allowance was claimed by NHS staff in (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) trusts and (d) the NHS as a whole for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Management Consultants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the expenditure on management consultants for each year since 1980 for (a) regions, (b) districts and (c) trusts.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Attorney-General what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

The Attorney-General: The total cost to the Department of the Government car service for Ministers for the financial year 1990-91 was approximately £120,000. Two vehicles were involved.

Active Termination of Life

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration is being given to bringing prosecutions in those cases referred to in the statement of 11 November by Mr. Richard Turner of the western European department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in a letter a copy of which has been drawn to his attention, that non-voluntary active termination of life is a practice which occurs in the United Kingdom, although it is illegal; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I understand that the letter by the official in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office referred to by my hon. Friend was misleading and that the FCO does not have any evidence suggesting the commission of offences of unlawful killing.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made in collating and publishing information on the proportion of British aid directly focused on the alleviation of poverty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My reply to the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) on 29 November, at column 313, described the Overseas Development Administration's policy information marker system—PIMS—designed to monitor performance against the seven priority objectives announced by my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development, in her speech at the Royal Institute of International Affairs on 18 October. Data from PIMS, including data on performance against ODA's priority objective of direct poverty reduction, will appear in the ODA section of the "Foreign and Commonwealth Office Departmental Report 1994".

Street Children

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to support the consortium of charities for street children launched by the Prime Minister on 18 November.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have indicated to the consortium our willingness to provide support, subject to appraisal, and have asked them to submit a proposal.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he has taken under the United Nation's convention on the rights of the child to protect the world's street children; and what estimates he has made of how many such children there are.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom attaches importance to promoting and protecting the rights of the child. We raise human rights abuses against children with the authorities of those countries concerned. The resolutions on street children at the Commission on Human Rights and at the United Nations General Assembly this year stem from a United Kingdom initiative during our presidency of the EU in 1992.

The Overseas Development Administration supports non-governmental organisations in their work with street children in Latin America, India, the Philippines, South Africa and other parts of Africa. We have committed over £225,000 to such projects this year. We are also supporting projects in Albania, Bulgaria and Romania through the charity know-how fund.

Estimates of the global numbers of street children vary according to definition. Some estimates are confined to children actually living on the street while others include those who work on the street while living partly at home. The United Kingdom has not attempted to make an independent estimate.

Grenada

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list details of existing and proposed investments by the Commonwealth Development Corporation in Grenada.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Commonwealth Development Corporation—CDC—has a single investment in Grenada. Since 1991, it has invested £1·938 million in Liberty Club Ltd. The CDC is considering possible involvement in Grenada Electricity Services Ltd.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the practice of his Department to conduct an annual opinion poll on the public's attitude to overseas aid and development; what were the results of this survey in the latest year for which figures are available; and where they can be seen.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is not the practice of the Department to conduct an annual opinion poll on the public's attitude to overseas aid.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list by country of all projects currently being funded from the British bilateral aid programme, detailing project title, expected duration and main objectives.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Nearly 4,000 projects, many very small, are currently being funded by the Overseas Development Administration from the bilateral aid programme. It would be disproportionately expensive to list for each of them the data sought by the hon. Member.

Aggregated information on the main objectives of projects will be published in the "Foreign and Commonwealth Office Departmental Report 1994".

Some details of the major projects in a range of countries are available in the partners in development booklets published by the ODA. These and a list of projects funded from the know-how fund for eastern and central Europe and the former Soviet Union are in the Libraries of the House.

Development Projects (Confidentiality)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent details of long-term development projects submitted in support and evaluation of successful applications for funds from his Department are treated by his Department as confidential; and what access to this information is provided.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 8 December at columns 269-70. Proposals, reports and evaluations submitted to the ODA under the joint funding scheme for non-governmental organisations can be made available on request and by agreement between the ODA and the organisation concerned.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Commonwealth Development Corporation has been authorised to operate in additional countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following a request from the corporation, approval has been given for the CDC to operate in Guatemala. In pursuing investment opportunities we expect CDC to give priority to promoting private sector development.

Population Conference

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of the United Kingdom national report on population for the international conference on population and development, taking place in Cairo in September 1994.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Copies of the United Kingdom national report have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

The Prime Minister: The charge to my office for ministerial use of the Government car service during 1990-91 was £117,952. Two vehicles were involved.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department Do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

The Prime Minister: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. They are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Identification Numbers

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the smallest number of separate identification numbers in use by any Government department that a person with a driving licence and a passport can have; and how many persons are employed in the various Departments of state to administer these separate registers, giving the number employed in each case.

The Prime Minister: A person with a driving licence and a passport would have a driver number, a passport number, a national health service number and is likely to have a national insurance number.

Driver numbers are automatically generated by computer when a licence is issued and require no additional staff effort. The Passport Agency employs 32 people at the central records unit at Hayes whose job it is to administer passport records. National insurance numbers are issued in two ways: 70 per cent. are issued centrally by the Department of Social Security in an automated process and the remainder are issued locally. The issuing of a national insurance number and the administration of records are part of the general work of departmental staff. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys employs 180 staff at the national health service central register in Southport whose duties include administration of national health records as well as other responsibilities.

Local Government Review

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance he has given to the Minister for Local Government and Planning in relation to the announcements anticipating the Government's response to the Local Government Commission's final report on the North Yorkshire review.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 29 November, Official Report, column 325.

Nursery Places

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if it is Government policy to provide nursery places for all three and four-year-olds whose parents want it.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policy is to promote choice and diversity of educational and other forms of provision for the under-fives, within the resources available. The scale and pattern of provision locally are matters for individual local authorities and other local providers.

Departmental Refrigerators

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to direct all Departments of State to purchase ozone-friendly fridges when replacing existing stocks of departmental refrigerators.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment emphasised the importance of phasing out the use of ozone-depleting substances at a recent meeting of green Ministers. Information on ozone-friendly fridges was circulated to all departments in July this year. Each Department is responsible for its own environmental strategy and purchasing decisions.

Employment Policy

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's policy on trying to ensure that full employment exists in Britain.

The Prime Minister: Economic growth and jobs are generated by businesses and their employees, not by Governments. But Governments do have a responsibility for ensuring that markets work properly and that the regulatory and tax burden on business is kept to an absolute minimum.

The Government also have the essential task of establishing a macroeconomic framework, which provides the stability that businesses need to plan for the future. This means that inflation and public finances need to be kept under control.

These are the policies that the Government believe will create wealth and jobs, not just in the United Kingdom, but in the European Community as a whole.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Expenditure

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the allocation to individual programmes in Northern Ireland of the public expenditure totals announced on 30 November.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: In his unified Budget Statement on 30 November, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced total public expenditure planning figures for the Northern Ireland programme. I have now decided on the allocations to individual programmes as shown in the table. Copies of a more detailed statement have been placed in the Library. These allocations reflect my assessment of how best to distribute the Northern Ireland public expenditure totals in response to local needs and circumstances.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of providing cars for Ministers during the 1990-91 financial year was around £680,000.

For most of the year, only four cars were provided by the Government car service, but this was increased to five when the number of Ministers of State increased.

Not all Ministers had the exclusive use of a car; these costs therefore include private hire cars to supplement the five cars provided by the Government car service. They also include the cost of cars provided on duty by the Royal Ulster Constabulary for Ministers when they were in Northern Ireland.

Pensioners

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people of pensionable age were living in Northern Ireland during 1991, 1992 and 1993; what percentage they represent of the overall population in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information, taken from the provisional 1991 and 1992 mid-year estimates of population, is as follows:

1992	241,600	15

Comparable data for 1993 are not yet available.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the Ernst and Young report which was commissioned by the Industrial Development Board into the reasons why overseas companies have invested in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Ernst and Young were not commissioned to produce a report for the Industrial Development Board into the reasons why overseas companies have invested in Northern Ireland. They were used, however, by the IDB to extend the work undertaken for the Invest in Britain Bureau to produce a reference document which could help the IDB sell the Northern Ireland business opportunity in a very competitive environment. I regret that this information is for internal use only and it would not be appropriate to have the document placed in the Library.

Arts Council

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current level of funding for the Arts Council in Northern Ireland; what the projected grants to the Council will be for 1994-96 and 1995-97; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: In the current financial year, funding for the Arts Council of Northern Ireland is £6·379 million. My right hon. and learned Friend has today announced the allocations to programmes for 1994-95 and I will provide further details, including the funding of the Arts Council, shortly.

Rural Planning Policy

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the recently published review of rural planning policy in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I announced the outcome of the review of planning policy for rural Northern Ireland on 23 September 1993. Since then the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and Environment Link have asked for further information on the effect of the strategy.

Marketing and Management

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding is available in 1993-94 for (a) the export marketing programme and (b) the graduate management development programme; and what funds he proposes to make available in 1994-95.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Andrew Hunter, dated 10 December 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland about the funding for the Export Marketing and Graduate Management Development Programmes in the years 1993-94 and 1994-95. As the Training and Employment Agency has responsibility for these programmes, I am writing to you directly in response.

In the year 1993-94, £668,000 has been allocated to the Export Marketing Programme and £1,951,000 to the Graduate Management Programme.

With regard to 1994-95, I am unable at present to provide figures for the proposed funding as the Public Expenditure Survey allocations have not been completed. However, I envisage that sufficient funding will be made available from within the overall allocation to enable the programmes to be operated at least at the current level of activity and in the light of the outcome of the imminent competitive tendering process to which both programmes are subject.

I regret I cannot be more specific at this stage.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce an environmental protection agency to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In Northern Ireland, most of the intended functions of the proposed agency in England and Wales already lie within central Government, in the environment service of the Department of the Environment. When final details of the agency are available, I will decide whether any proposals for change in Northern Ireland should be made.

Gaming Licences

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what restrictions currently exist governing the granting of licences to gaming and amusement establishments in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The detailed restrictions are contained in parts III and V of the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 and related regulations made under it. These relate mainly to the status and fitness of the applicant and to the suitability of the premises in which the business is to be conducted.

Rural Hospitals

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many rural hospitals were operational in Northern Ireland in 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Hospitals are not classified into the categories "rural" and "urban".

Housing

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to introduce compulsory competitive tendering to housing executive management in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; what representations he has received about such proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering for housing management. They will take some time to consider the exact form of competitive tendering appropriate to Northern Ireland, taking into account the particular local circumstances and background against which the Northern Ireland Housing Executive operates. I have received a number of representations directly and indirectly from elected representatives. It will be at least 1995 before the necessary enabling legislative provisions are in place and the normal consultative process will take place in bringing forward that legislation.

Sinn Fein (Contacts)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what instructions or advice are or have been given to the Royal Ulster Constabulary, with regard to investigations concerning leading members of IRA or Sinn Fein with whom Her Majesty's Government were in contact, on the arrest or questioning of such persons (a) during the period February to November 1993 and (b) at present.

Sir John Wheeler: None. Criminal investigations are entirely an operational matter for the Chief Constable.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department received on the breach of the United Nations embargo on arms sales to South Africa by the International Signal and Control company (a) from 1975 to 1986 and (b) from 1987 onwards; and whether the role of ISC in circumventing the arms embargo was brought to the attention of Her Majesty's Government when ISC was bought by Ferranti.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that the alleged breaches of the United Nations arms embargo did not involve exports from the United Kingdom. The allegations were reported to the Security Council 421 committee which oversees compliance with the United Nations arms embargo against South Africa. Legal proceedings have been taken against ISC officials and others in the United States.

Korean Peninsula

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the European Council of Ministers last discussed the situation on the Korean peninsula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The European Council has not discussed the situation on the Korean peninsula in the last two years.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the peaceful reunification of the Korean peninsula.

Mr. Goodlad: We have consistently supported efforts to achieve this through direct contact between North and South Korea. We hope that these contacts will soon resume and make progress.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation on the Korean peninsula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The situation on the Korean peninsula gives cause for concern. Contacts between North and South Korea to follow up their 1991 agreement on reconciliation, non-aggression, exchanges and co-operation seem to have stalled. North Korea has not co-operated with the International Atomic Energy Agency on all the necessary inspections of its nuclear facilities. North Korea's attitude has serious implications for stability in the region. We hope that early progress can be made on both these issues.

GATT

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make available to hon. Members copies of the renegotiated proposals for the multilateral trade organisations, prior to the deadline for the signing of the GATT Uruguay round on 15 December.

Mr. Goodlad: A copy of the latest draft of the multilateral trade organisation—MTO—agreement has been deposited in the Library of the House of Commons, in response to a question from the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) on 1 December, Official Report, column 533. A copy of the final draft of the MTO agreement will be deposited in the House Library as soon as it is available in London.

High Commissions and Embassies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the staffing levels and staff gradings for each British high commission and embassy in Africa in 1983; and what they are in the current year.

Mr. Goodlad: A comparison of staffing levels and staff gradings at FCO missions in Africa between 1983 and 1993 is given in the tables.

Active Termination of Life

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the inquiries made and referred to in the statement of 11 November by Mr. Richard Turner of the western European department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, that non-voluntary active termination of life is a practice which occurs in the United Kingdom, although it is illegal; and if he will identify the incidents of such murder to which the statement refers.

Mr. Goodlad: Having made prior inquiries of the Home Office and Department of Health, an FCO officer referred to non-voluntary active termination of life in his reply of 11 November to a letter from a member of the public. He made clear that this practice is not condoned by Her Majesty's Government.

Deliberate killing will in the absence of a lawful defence amount either to murder or manslaughter and the perpetrator of such an act would be liable to prosecution under the criminal law. Between 1988 and 1992, four offences of homicide relating to deliberate killing of a patient by a member of the health professions were notified to the police. All four of these offences were crimes committed by the nurse, Beverley Allitt. We have no further evidence of any unlawful killing of this sort occurring in this country.

Mr. Richard Turner

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the grade, position, and salary of Mr. Richard Turner of the western European department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; how long he has been in post; and what are his responsibilities.

Mr. Goodlad: Mr. Turner is a Grade DS7M officer in the diplomatic service. The pay scale for DSM7, as for HEOs in the home civil service, is from £16,000 to £20,218 per annum. Mr. Turner has been the desk officer responsible for relations with Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands in the western European department since April 1993.

Iraq

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to gain the release of prisoners of war and other foreign detainees held in Iraq; if he will list the numbers by nationality of those prisoners and detainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have attended the two meetings in Geneva held this year between the International Committee of the Red Cross, the tripartite commission—USA, United Kingdom and France—Kuwait and Saudi Arabia to discuss the detainees. We have also continued to raise the plight of Kuwaiti and other detainees at the United Nations whenever the Security Council reviews sanctions against Iraq. We last did so on 18 November. We will continue to do so until Iraq fulfils all its obligations under Security Council resolutions 686 and 687.

According to the Kuwaiti National Committee for Missing and POW Affairs, there are 627 detainees in Iraq, of whom 592 are Kuwaitis and 35 other nationalities—13 Saudis, five Iranians, four Egyptians, four Syrians, three Indians, three Lebanese, one Bahraini, one Omani and one Filipino.

One German and one Frenchman are also in detention for illegal entry. We hope they will be released soon.

Gibraltar

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will bring forward proposals for citizens of Gibraltar to be able to vote in the 1994 European Parliament elections.

Mr. Goodlad: We do not plan to do so. Annex II of the EC Act on direct elections of 1976 limits the franchise in European parliamentary elections to the United Kingdom.

Unidentified Flying Objects

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the treaty powers which enabled the European Parliament's trade, research and technology committee to study and spend public resources on unidentified flying objects and the possibility of aliens being present in the asteroid belt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that a member of the energy, research and technology committee has reported to the Committee on research being undertaken in Europe on unidentified flying objects and related phenomena, following a European Parliament resolution on the subject. A proposal for Community research in this field has not been put forward; nor would I expect one to be unless such research were shown to be consistent with treaty objectives.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the proposal by the EC trade, research and technology committee that an organisation on the consideration of unidentified flying objects should be assigned Community status and funding will be subject to a decision of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Goodlad: The Commission has not made a proposal for the establishment of an unidentified flying objects research observatory. Were it to do so, I can assure my hon. Friend that the Council of Ministers would have to agree rules concerning implementation, funding and duration of the programme, in accordance with the treaty articles concerning research activities.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the EC Commission has the powers on its own initiative to give funding to the Euro-unidentified flying objects observation centre recommended by the European Parliament's trade, research and technology committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: No. Detailed rules concerning implementation, funding and duration of specific Community research programmes must be agreed by the Council of Ministers. The Commission could not fund a Euro unidentified flying objects observation centre in the absence of a Council decision to do so.

European Parliament

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost of the European Parliament in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the costs borne from United Kingdom public funds on the basis of the net contributions of member states to the European Union.

Mr. Goodlad: Expenditure under the European Parliament's budget for 1992, net of receipts, was 538·241 mecu, approx £419,882,000. Member states contribute to the European Community budget as a whole, not to individual programmes. The net United Kingdom contribution in 1992 was 2,387 mecu.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedures are available to determine the limits of the consideration of issues by the European Parliament.

Mr. Goodlad: The issues considered by the European Parliament will generally be determined by its role as set out in the EC treaties and the treaty on European Union. It is for the Parliament itself to regulate its internal procedures.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

St. James's Palace

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what refurbishment, at what cost, has taken place in St. James's palace since April 1992.

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows: cleaning and repair of brick and stonework—£820,000; refurbishment of six residential apartments, including relocation of changing facilities for the yeoman of the guard—£250,000; a number of small projects including redecoration of some areas of the state apartments, external redecorations, renewal of windows, water cisterns and other minor works—£100,000.

Total £1,170,000.

TV (Wales)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will discuss with the Independent Broadcasting Authority and television operators how to ensure that all parts of Wales can receive all television channels originating from within Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: At present, 98·3 per cent. of the population of Wales can receive television from either a transmitter in Wales or England or both.

Responsibility for coverage of terrestrial television services lies with the broadcasters, who determine their own engineering priorities in the light of available resources, taking account of local factors and availability of frequencies. The Government do not seek to influence their judgments.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary for State of National Heritage which communities within Wales are at present unable to receive a reasonable reception of programmes transmitted by HTV, BBC Wales or S4C.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that, in the following areas, some communities of more than 200 people may not have a reasonable reception of Welsh television services:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people faced marginal tax rates (a) including and (b) excluding national insurance payments, of (i) over 40 per cent., (ii) over 50 per cent., (iii) over 60 per cent., (iv) over 70 per cent., (v) over 80 per cent., (vi) over 90 per cent. and (vii) over 100 per cent. in every year since 1978-79, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimated numbers of taxpayers liable to income tax at rates above the basic rate are in the table. Estimates of the numbers with marginal net income deduction rates, taking account of the withdrawal of social security benefits, at or above certain levels were published in figure 19 of "Social Security: The Government's expenditure plans 1993-94 to 1995-96", Cm 2213.

[1] Single people and married couples for years up to and including 1989-90, individuals from 1990-91.

[2] Tax rate applicable to earned income. This excludes any liability to the investment income surcharge for years up to 1983-84.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1993-94 the number of basic rate and higher rate taxpayers with earned incomes above the national insurance contributions upper earnings limit, giving figures separately for (a) husbands, (b) wives, (c) single men and (d) single women and distinguishing between pensioners and non-pensioners.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates of individuals aged under 65 with earned incomes above the national insurance contributions upper earnings limit for 1993-94 are given in the table. About 20,000 individuals aged 65 or over have earnings above this limit.

(000s)

Individuals	Basic rate	Higher rate
Single males	260	260
Single females	130	80
Husbands	1,010	920
Wives	100	70
Total	1,500	1,300

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for (a) April 1994 and (b) April 1995 the percentage change in after-tax incomes for each decile of the population.

Mr. Dorrell: The change in after-tax incomes will depend on a range of factors that will affect what happens to the gross incomes and tax payments of those in each decile and cannot reliably be estimated.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people with earnings so low that they do not pay income tax will be affected by the increases in indirect taxation announced in November's Budget.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that there are about 3½ million individuals with some earnings who are not paying income tax. It is not possible to determine the proportion of these people who will be affected by the increases in indirect taxation announced in the November Budget.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people will be affected by his decision to reduce (a) the married couple's income tax allowance to 15 per cent. in 1994-95 and (b) mortgage interest relief to 15 per cent. from April 1995.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that 10·3 million individuals benefiting from the married couple's allowance and related allowances in 1994-95 would be affected by the restriction of these allowances to 15 per cent. in 1995-96. The restriction of these allowances to 20 per cent. in 1994-95 will affect 9·6 million individuals. A total of 10·1 million single people and married couples will be affected by the restrictions of mortgage interest relief to 15 per cent. in 1995-96.

No account has been taken of possible behavioural changes resulting from such restrictions.

Disability Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, in the latest year for which information is available, is the total number of people in receipt of disability benefit who pay income tax; and how many pay VAT.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that in 1991-92 there were 200,000 tax-paying recipients of attendance allowance or mobility allowance.

This estimate is based on Department of Social Security estimates of the total numbers in receipt of each benefit and estimates from the 1991 family expenditure survey of the proportions who were taxpayers.

The change from mobility allowance to disability living allowance and disability working allowance in 1992-93 means that information for later years is not yet available. The results of the 1993 family expenditure survey will provide data on these allowances when they are available.

VAT is chargeable on a wide range of consumer expenditure and it seems likely that everybody has to pay some in the course of a year.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his decision not to uprate the personal allowance in 1994-95 will cost (a) 20 per cent. taxpayers and (b) basic-rate taxpayers per year; and how much not uprating the personal allowance and the higher-rate band will cost top-rate taxpayers per year.

Mr. Dorrell: The additional tax liability for a person aged under 65 in 1994-95 compared with statutory indexation of the personal allowance and basic rate limit are as follows:

Marginal rate of tax	Additional tax liability £
Lower	14
Basic	17·50
Higher	103

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he estimates will be raised by the Treasury in (a) 1994-95, (b) 1995-96 and (c) 1996-97 from the freezing of personal income tax allowances; and how many more people he estimates will have to pay income tax by December 1994 as a result.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates of the revenue yield in each of the three years, compared with statutory indexation, are as follows:

Revenue yield, £ million

Allowances unchanged	430	550	560

In 1994-95, no one will be brought into income tax as a result of the November Budget changes. However, about 180,000 more people will pay tax in 1994-95 compared with statutory indexation of personal allowances.

Forward Catering Services

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that employment rights under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 are to be honoured by the successful purchaser of Forward Catering Services; if the Astra clause will be included as a condition of sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The four companies which have been short listed as prospective purchasers of Forward understand that TUPE will apply to this transfer. All have indicated that they would be willing to give an undertaking to staff about their redundancy entitlements, although it was made clear that that would not be a condition of sale.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he (a) last attended and (b) next expects to attend a meeting of the board of directors of the European investment bank.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am a member of the bank's board of governors, not of the board of directors. Consequently, I have never attended, nor do I expect in the future to attend, any meetings of the board of directors.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of the United Kingdom's Government shareholding in the European investment bank; what proportion it constitutes of the total shareholding; what changes in its level there have been in the past (a) 10, (b) five and (c) one year; and what proposals there are to amend it in either direction.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total subscribed share capital of the European investment bank is currently set at 57,600,000,000 ecus—£43,530,834,341*. Of this, the United Kingdom holds 11,017,450,000 ecus—£8,326,367,896*—or approximately 19·1 per cent. of the total.

The bank's capital was fixed at its present amount on 1 January 1991, when it was doubled from its then level of 28,800 mecu. The previous increase in capital, which was the only other change during the past 10 years, occurred on 1 January 1986. At that time the capital was raised from 14,400 mecu to 28,800 mecu.

There are at present no proposals to either decrease or increase the capital of the bank.

*Figures converted at 30 November 1993 £/ecu conversion rate (£1=1·3232 ecu).

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now resign from the board of directors of the European investment bank.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since I am not, nor have I ever been, a member of the bank's board of directors, there can be no question of my resigning from this body. I have no intention of resigning my position on the bank's board of governors.

Share Sales

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 231, if he will provide details of fees paid to underwriters associated with the share sales of British Telecom, British Gas and the regional water companies.

Mr. Dorrell: No. Fees paid to underwriters as part of the privatisation programme are treated as commercially confidential. Total fees paid to underwriters are quantified within the relevant National Audit Office reports published by the Comptroller and Auditor General. For the sales requested, with the exception of the BT secondary sales which were not underwritten, the total fees paid to underwriters were:

BT	1984	74·0
British Gas	1986	60·0
Water	1989	33·2

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 231, if he will provide details of fees paid to advisers and underwriters associated with the privatisation and share sales of the regional electricity boards, Powergen and National Power.

Mr. Dorrell: No. Fees paid to advisers, underwriters, and so on as part of the privatisation programme are treated as commercially confidential. Total fees paid to advisers are quantified within the relevant National Audit Office reports published by the Comptroller and Auditor General. For the sales requested, the total fees, excluding VAT, paid to advisers and underwriters up to 31 December 1991 were:

£million

	Advisers	Underwriters
Regional Electricity Companies 1990	28·8	36·6
Generating Companies 1991	17·2	14·9

Unemployment (Costs)

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the overall cost of unemployment including all expenditure on training and all Government initiatives to reduce unemployment and also including all state support such as housing benefit, mortgage interest relief and all passport benefits paid whilst unemployed or undertaking unemployment reducing training and other programmes.

Mr. Portillo: The overall cost of unemployment is highly sensitive to the factors which cause that unemployment and cannot be estimated on the basis specified in the question.

TRANSPORT

Coastal Safety, Shetlands

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what resources are currently available for port state control inspection in Shetland;

(2) what resources were available in Shetland for ship inspection for port state control up until 22 November;

(3) what extra resources he intends to make available for futher port state control inspections of Klondyker ships (a) off Shetland, (b) off Ullapool and (c) elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The inspection resources of the east of Scotland district in which Shetland lies are available as necessary for port state control inspection in Scotland. Resources from other districts are also available as necessary. In addition to the one surveyor permanently based in Shetland, three surveyors are currently carrying out inspections in Shetland.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has given to Shetland Islands council's request for financial support for (a) radar surveillance, (b) aerial surveillance and (c) salvage provision around the coast of Shetland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I will send the hon. Member a copy of the correspondence.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all short-term measures taken by his department since the sinking of the Braer to improve safety of shipping around the coast of Shetland.

Mr. Norris: Measures, which applied more widely than in the Shetland islands, were implemented quickly and will remain in operation. A voluntary code produced by the United Kingdom Chamber of Shipping after consultation with industry and others set out specific navigational recommendations for the routeing of ships around the United Kingdom coast.

In addition, the Department made specific proposals to the International Maritime Organisation which entered into force on 28 November. The measures, summarised as follows, now apply to vessels of all flags:

- (a) for vessels over 5,000 gross tonnes carrying oil or other hazardous cargoes in bulk:
    - (i) amended "areas to be avoided" to the north south, and west of the Shetland Islands;
    - (ii) new "areas to be avoided" off the Orkney Islands and around Fair Isle;
- (b) "precautionary areas" in the northern and south-eastern approaches to Yell Sound, and in the approaches to Lerwick;
- (c) recommendations on navigation for laden tankers in the Pentland Firth;
- (d) recommendations to report to the coastguard for all laden vessels in the Pentland Firth, and off Fair Isle.

Recommended routes will be introduced for the Fair Isle channel subject to the successful completion in 1994 of further hydrographic surveys at an estimated cost of around £2 million.

Klondyker Ships

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what loopholes in respect of ship safety regulation he has identified in relation to Klondyker ships inside United Kingdom territorial waters, but outside harbour boundaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We are considering the lessons to be drawn from recent incidents involving Klondykers. The subject is also relevant to the Donaldson inquiry, which has agreed to consider submissions on the subject, and we shall want to see the report before drawing firm conclusions.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for (a) monitoring and (b) enforcing, the intermediate recommendations of the marine accident investigation branch inquiry into Klondyker ships within Lerwick harbour in respect of (1) bunker fuel and (2) maintenance of vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The inspections being carried out are monitoring bunker levels and general maintenance on each vessel. Evidence is emerging that these efforts have already brought about an improvement in the fleet in this respect. The code of practice now being prepared will specify particular requirements for bunker levels and maintenance.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he intends to submit to the EC concerning improved safety arrangements for Klondyker fleets.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend is taking action under the powers available to him in domestic legislation. We shall involve our colleagues in the European Community when that is appropriate.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by name the Klondyker ships inspected by his Department in 1993 and include date of inspection, together with details of recommendations and in each case, whether the vessel was (a) in harbour or (b) outside the harbour boundary.

Mr. Norris: Fish factory ships inspected in United Kingdom between 1 January 1993 and 7 December 1993 were as follows:

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to ensure the continued safety through inspection of the Klondyker fleet.

Mr. Norris: A team of surveyors is currently inspecting the fleet of Klondykers anchored off Lerwick to ensure, in particular, their safety at anchor. Other marine districts will inspect Klondykers as and when they enter ports in their area.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department have indemnified Norwest-Holst Construction Ltd. in respect of (a) compensation payments should the M11 link road contract be cancelled or delayed and (b) the costs of security on site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: In common with other construction contracts let by my Department, the usual Institution of Civil Engineers conditions of contract apply. These provide that claims may be made for actual loss incurred through delay. This contract also provides for specific and contingency security measures, the cost of which is included in the contract price.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what studies have been carried out by his Department of the impact of the M11 link road in generating additional traffic to neighbouring areas; and if he will publish the results;

(2) what estimate he has made of the likely increase in traffic volume along the A12 Eastern avenue as a result of the building of the M11 link road for each of the next five years.

Mr. Norris: During construction of the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road, temporary traffic management measures may mean that traffic will be diverted from present routes, and increase in some areas. There could be extra traffic on A12 due to removal of waste and delivery of materials.

The long-term aim of the link road is to remove traffic from existing roads and so provide the opportunity for traffic-calming measures in neighbouring areas.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what purpose his Department employs the private security firm of Norwest Holst in connection with the M11 link road.

Mr. Norris: Norwest Holst Ltd. is a civil engineering contractor and as such is the main contractor for contract 4 of the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road. Among the contractor's duties are the maintenance of the security of their sites and workings.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what private security firms have been employed by his Department in connection with the M11 link road through Wanstead.

Mr. Norris: Essential Security Services have been employed to safeguard unoccupied properties in the Department's ownership.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has received the Price Waterhouse report on the potential privatisation of part of the Vehicle Inspectorate; and when he expects to make an announcement;

(2) what proposals he has for separate legislation to privatise the testing side of the Vehicle Inspectorate.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend received this report only recently and is considering its findings. He will make an announcement on future plans for the Vehicle Inspectorate's testing function, and legislative implications, in due course.

Regional Airports

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's policy towards the expansion of regional airports in the light of the planning applications submitted by Liverpool airport and Manchester airport.

Mr. Norris: The recent runway capacity in the south-east report shows that there are better prospects for growth in traffic at regional airports with a greater range of direct services becoming available than is the case for airports in the south-east. This is good for travellers. We are encouraging local authority-owned regional airports to involve the private sector in their development plans.

The application for Manchester airport was called in by the Secretary of State for the Environment in October and will be for joint decision by him and the Secretary of State for Transport. In view of this quasi-judicial role it would not be appropriate to comment on the proposal. Consideration of Liverpool airport's recent application is a matter in the first instance for the local planning authorities.

Home Working

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) by region, (b) division and (c) office location all home working initiatives operating in his Department and the grades involved.

Mr. Norris: At present, this Department has no staff working wholly from home. From time to time, temporary local arrangements are made to allow individuals who have health or other difficulties to work part of the week from home, but central records of these arrangements are not kept.

Salvage Tugs

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to introduce legislation to ratify the International Maritime Organisation convention on salvage tugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: It is the Government's intention that legislation should be introduced which will enable ratification of the international convention on salvage 1989 at the earliest possible opportunity.

Asthma

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has carried out of the effect of increasing traffic volumes on levels of asthma among children and adults.

Mr. Key: The Department of Health is funding research into the health effects of air pollution, including those relating to asthma.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. MacGregor: Special advisers in my Department are appointed following consultation with and approval from the Prime Minister and the Treasury. They have direct access to me and stand outside the departmental hierarchy.

Special advisers in my Department are members of the the civil service and have the same conditions of service and are subject to the same rules of conduct as other civil servants except that they are not subject to the business appointment rules, when they leave the Department. Their terms of appointment include the following:

> "All civil servants owe duties of confidentiality and loyal service to the Crown. These require civil servants to exercise care in the use of official information which they acquire in the course of their official duties and to protect information which is held in confidence."

Their appointment letters also draw attention to the rules governing the use of official information and related activities and those governing participation in outside activities involving the use of official information or experience and the general principles of conduct to which all civil servants are expected to adhere at all times.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. MacGregor: I currently employ two special advisers in the Department of Transport.

Mrs. E. F. Laing has been my special political adviser in this Department since 13 April 1992.

Sir Idris Pearce has been employed as a part-time special adviser on property matters concerned with British Railways privatisation since 16 June 1992.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of projects undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory in Crowthorne were instigated by direct commercial or industrial demand in 1980, 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Key: Percentage of projects undertaken on a commercial basis by the Transport Research Laboratory.

1979-80 No records but probably 0 per cent. as TRL's resources were fully committed to DOT and ODA.

1989-90 5 per cent. of projects—40 projects—producing 2 per cent. of income—£600,000.

1992-93 21 per cent. of projects—150 projects—producing 5 per cent. of income—Key£2 million.

Parking

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department is taking to combat the problem of parking on pavements.

Mr. Key: While there is a general ban on parking heavy goods vehicles on the pavement, parking other kinds of vehicles there is banned only where it is prohibited by a local Act of Parliament, as in London, where it contravenes a traffic order made by the local traffic authority, or if the vehicle is parked in a dangerous or obstructive position. Responses to the consultation document "Curbing an Abuse", which we published in 1987, showed that a complete ban would not be practical. It would create severe difficulties for many local traffic authorities, and the police do not have the resources that would be necessary to enforce it effectively.

I accept that the current situation is not entirely satisfactory, but expect it to improve as local authorities take on responsibility for parking enforcement under the arrangements in the Road Traffic Act 1991.

In addition, we are about to publish guidance detailing the engineering measures available to local traffic authorities to prevent vehicles mounting the pavement. Such measures have the advantage that they are largely self-enforcing.

M1

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold discussions with the relevant local authorities and other interested parties in the area covered by the scheme to widen the M1 between junctions 28 and 32.

Mr. Key: These proposals are generally at an early stage. Opportunities will be offered for discussion throughout their progress and there will be other occasions for comment, as usual.

Goods Vehicle Licensing

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the organisations that were invited to submit comments on his consultation paper on the deregulation of goods vehicle operator licensing;

(2) if he will list the names of the individuals and organisations who also responded to his consultation paper on the deregulation of goods vehicle licensing.

Mr. Key: Sixty-three representative organisations were invited to submit comments to the consultation document. I am placing a full list of the organisations in the Library. Fifteen of them responded to the consultation.

In addition I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 542, which gives the main organisations that replied. It is not our normal practice to publish the names of individuals who have responded to consultation exercises of this sort.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often utility emergency vehicles exempt from goods vehicle operator licensing have to be used for emergency work to gain an exemption.

Mr. Key: There are no minimum levels of use to qualify for exemption.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the difference between vehicles exempted from goods vehicle operator licensing and exempt vehicles as listed in the "Annual Abstract of Statistics 1993", page 191 table 10.5; and how it is possible to accurately count exempt vehicles in table 10.5 but not to supply information on the number of vehicles exempt from goods vehicle operator licensing.

Mr. Key: The table referred to concerns vehicle licensing rather than operator licensing, and the exemptions mentioned are those for vehicles requiring licensing but exempt from the payment of vehicle excise duty, VED. The records kept by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency of licensed vehicles show whether or not they are exempt from VED, so it is possible to count such vehicles. There are no records of vehicles not subject to operator licensing.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now carry out a study into whether vehicles exempt from goods vehicles operator licensing are more or less likely to be involved in accidents than licensed vehicles; and if he will collect accident statistics in such a way that those accidents involving exempt vehicles are easily distinguishable.

Mr. Key: The number of exempt vehicles over 3·5 tonnes is estimated to be relatively small compared to the total vehicle population. I have no indications that they are disproportionately involved in accidents. Collecting data on accident rates as proposed would be expensive and I do not regard it as justified.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the definition of a local authority weights and measures vehicle; and for what reasons such vehicles are exempt from goods vehicle operator licensing.

Mr. Key: For the purposes of goods vehicle operator licensing, it is a vehicle which is being used by a local authority for the purposes of the enactments relating to weights and measures or the sale of food and drugs. We see no need for operator licensing for minor categories of vehicles, unlikely to pose safety or other problems.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to extending goods vehicle operator licensing to electrically propelled vehicles.

Mr. Key: We are currently reviewing the list of exemptions from operator licensing and will consider both whether to add additional categories such as electrically propelled vehicles or to exempt further categories.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if recovery vehicles exempt from goods vehicle operator licensing have to be used solely for recovery work to gain exemption.

Mr. Key: Yes.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if vehicles used to carry materials for road and motorway construction are exempt from goods vehicle operator licensing if used for other work; and if he will consider extending operator licensing regulations to such vehicles.

Mr. Key: The exemption applies to trailers only, in cases where they are not constructed primarily for the carriage of goods but are being used incidentally for that purpose in connection with the construction, maintenance or repair of roads. This exemption would for instance cover trailers incorporating road-building machinery which carry specialised road-building materials in order to perform their functions. We are currently reviewing the list of exemptions.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if ambulances operated by private sector companies are exempt from goods vehicle operator licensing.

Mr. Key: Yes, so long as they are used for ambulance purposes.

City Centre Motor Races

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory requirements and assurances he requires before granting approval for a city town centre formula 2 motor race.

Mr. Key: Section 12 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 prohibits races or trials of speed on public ways. However, the Birmingham City Council Act 1985 allows Birmingham city council to close specified roads on specified dates for motor racing purposes.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made in the Government's public spending plans for 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97 for expenditure on the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: We have made provision for public expenditure of £40 million in 1994-95, £20 million in 1995-96 and £10 million in 1996-97. Total expenditure on the project in this period will be substantially greater, and will be made up by funding from the private sector following the appointment of the private sector promoter.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made in the Government's spending plans for the substantial public sector support for the channel rail link to which he committed the Government in his statement of 22 March.

Mr. Freeman: Substantial public sector support will be provided by making British Rail's European passenger services subsidiary part of the project, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 11 November. Whether any further support is required, and if so its amount and timing, will be determined by the results of the competition to select the private sector promoter.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what portion of the provision for public expenditure on the channel tunnel rail link during 1994-95 to 1996-97 is intended to cover the compensation that the Government will have to pay to owners of properties affected from January 1994 when the route is safeguarded.

Mr. Freeman: The provision required for property purchase will depend upon the route chosen and the terms adopted for property purchase. The Government are giving careful consideration to these issues in the light of Union Railways' 29 October report and the comments received from consultees. We intend to make a statement next month.

Tracker Devices

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make the fitting of tracker devices to cars mandatory.

Mr. Key: None.

Roads, London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public consultation his Department has had during the last 12 months with boroughs in the Greater London area where major road development projects are under discussion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My Department has included the appropriate London boroughs in the public consultations which have been held in the last 12 months on the following major road development projects:

M25 Junctions 15-16 link road proposals;
Heathrow Terminal 5 Access M25 Spur Road and M4 Junctions 3 to 4b improvements;
A2 Kidbrooke Park Road interchange improvement;
A13/A112 junction improvement;
Blackwall Tunnel 3rd crossing proposal, and Heathrow Access and Southwest London Quadrant Study (HASQUAD)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the new roads building programme for the Greater London area that has been approved and for which funding has been allocated by his Department.

Mr. Norris: New starts on national road construction for 1994-95 will be announced in the new year.

Trans-European Road

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he is giving to providing an environmental impact assessement of the trans-European road from Felixstowe to its final destination in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key: An environmental impact assessment will be undertaken in accordance with the normal procedures for any new road scheme which is proposed within the United Kingdom along this route if it is likely to have a significant effect on the environment.

Marchioness Disaster

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will name the persons who were responsible for the report on the Marchioness disaster together with their official positions, experience and qualifications.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The report is that of the Chief Inspector of Marine Accidents, Captain P. B. Marriott. Prior to his appointment as chief inspector, Captain Marriott worked in the shipping industry for 33 years and is a fully qualified and experienced master mariner.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what relevant facts he now has in his possession, or have been drawn to his attention, which in his opinion are additional to those set out in the report of the marine accident investigation branch concerning the Marchioness disaster.

Mr. Norris: [holding answer 13 December 1993]: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total expenditure by the MAFF pesticides safety directorate on registering and monitoring the use of pesticides under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, and what was the total income from fees charged for all approval submissions and the levy on United Kingdom sales, in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: In the financial year 1992-93, the total expenditure by the MAFF pesticides safety directorate on registering and monitoring the use of pesticides under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 was £6·7 million. In the same year, the total income from fees was £0·5 million and the levy on United Kingdom sales was £6·2 million.

Days-at-Sea Restrictions

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she intends to take in the light of the decision by the High Court to refer the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations' application for judicial review of the Government's days-at-sea policy to the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Jack: The hon. Member will be aware of the recent High Court judgment in the NFFO's judicial review proceedings. The court, while noting that there is total agreement on the need to prevent overfishing of certain stocks, has concluded that there are various points of Community law which it felt unable to resolve without a reference to the European Court of Justice.

My right hon. Friends and I have considered carefully how to proceed in this situation. We have weighed on the one hand the pressing need for conservation action. On the other hand, we must recognise that the effect of the reference is to cast doubt on the operation of the scheme in the meantime. We have concluded that the most straightforward course is to suspend the implementation of days at sea restrictions pending the European Court's judgment—which we shall seek to have expedited.

Days-at-sea controls are one element of a package of measures designed to conserve the stocks and meet our Community targets, while securing value for money. Other elements are various new licensing rules and a £25 million decommissioning scheme.

Those fishermen whose bids have been accepted under the decommissioning scheme will receive their grants, provided that, in accordance with the scheme, they scrap their vessels and submit the necessary documentation to the Ministry before 1 March 1994.

Beyond that we need to review the way forward and as a first step I shall be speaking to the EC Commissioner about what needs to be done. I shall also speak to the industry. And I shall present further proposals to the House in due course.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all the land owned in Lancashire by the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 13 December 1993.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the effect on the freedom to roam on Forestry Commission land of decisions to be made following the report of the Forestry Review Group.

Mr. Jack: We have asked the forestry review group to ensure that, in carrying out its work, it takes full account of the need to safeguard existing public benefits such as access and recreation. When the group's report is received this aspect of its findings will be looked at very carefully indeed.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, for each separate piece of land currently owned or leased by the Forestry Commission in Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire and Gloucestershire (a) its name and (b) its area in hectares; and if she will place a map in the Library which names and identifies each of these pieces of land.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 9 December 1993]: The Forestry Commission manages the following areas of land in Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire and Gloucestershire:

County	Area (hectares)
Bedfordshire	798
Berkshire	512
Buckinghamshire	2,075
Gloucestershire	10,376

I have made arrangements for a map showing the location of the individual areas to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

The more detailed information requested on the individual areas is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list for each separate piece of land currently owned or leased by the Forestry Commission in Hertfordshire, Kent, Surrey and Wiltshire (a) its name and (b) its area in hectares; and if she will place a map in the Library which names and identifies each of these pieces of land.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The Forestry Commission manages the following areas of land in Hertfordshire, Kent, Surrey and Wiltshire.

County	Area (hectares)
Hertfordshire	567
Kent	3,676
Surrey	1,627
Wiltshire	3,955

I have made arrangements for a map showing the location of the individual areas to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

The more detailed information requested on the individual areas is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the hon. Member for Sherwood will receive an answer to his questions of 25 November relating to the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Michael Jack: I answered the hon. Member's questions on 13 December.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, for each separate piece of land currently owned or leased by the Forestry Commission in Cheshire, Cumbria and Lancashire (a) its name and (b) its area in hectares; and whether she will place a map in the Library which names and identifies each of these pieces of land.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 6 December 1993]: The Forestry Commission manages the following areas of land in Cheshire, Cumbria and Lancashire:

County	Area (hectares)
Cheshire	948
Cumbria	26,508
Lancashire	1,816

I have made arrangements for a map showing the location of the individual areas to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

The more detailed information requested on the individual areas is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, for each separate piece of land currently owned or leased by the Forestry Commission in Hereford and Worcester, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire (a) its name and (b) its area in hectares; and if she will place a map in the Library which names and identifies each of these pieces of land.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 9 December 1993]: The Forestry Commission manages the following areas of land in Hereford and Worcester, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire and Warwickshire.

County	Area (hectares)
Hereford and Worcester	5,072
Oxfordshire	632
Shropshire	4,612
Staffordshire	4,501
Warwickshire	639

I have made arrangements for a map showing the location of the individual areas to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

The more detailed information requested on the individual areas is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dioxins, Derbyshire

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information her Department has as to which geographical area the dioxin contamination on the farm closest to the Coalite works in Derbyshire is spreading.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry has undertaken further studies of dioxins in cows' milk from farms in the Bolsover area of Derbyshire. Milk taken from five farms in September was tested, including milk from the farm in question. In all cases the levels of dioxins found were lower than in similar samples taken in 1991 and 1992, indicating that the degree of contamination in the area is continuing to decrease. There is no evidence that the original contamination is spreading.

Mr. Skinner; To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will now publish the research undertaken by her Department which follows on from the third report on dioxins in Derbyshire; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A summary of the results of the September survey of dioxins in milk from farms in the Bolsover area of Derbyshire was published in the November edition of the MAFF food safety directorate information bulletin. An explanatory note giving full details of the survey was also made available on request. The small amount of research data obtained recently is currently subject to statistical analysis and the results will be published in due course. All other data from our research in the Bolsover area has been published in line with our earlier commitments.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken by her Department to study and limit the continuing dioxin contamination on the farm closest to the Coalite works in Derbyshire.

Mr. Soames: Dioxins in milk from suckling cows on this farm are falling, but are still in excess of a maximum tolerable concentration of 0·7 ng TEO/kg set by the Ministry and the Department of Health. This milk is not produced for human consumption and there is no direct risk to human health from the milk. The Ministry will continue its surveillance programme on dioxins in milk from this and other farms in the area to monitor the situation. This will ensure that no milk supplied for human comsumption contains unacceptable concentrations of dioxins.

Milk Industry

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make it her policy not to allow Milk Marque to retain responsibility for national milk records, animal health data and livestock improvements.

Mr. Jack: The Milk Marketing Board's reorganisation scheme contains the board's proposals for the transfer of certain of its assets to Milk Marque. My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales have yet to decide whether to approve the reorganisation scheme under the terms of the Agriculture Act 1993.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will direct the Milk Marketing Board forthwith to cease to use its funds and staff and those of its subsidiaries to recruit members for Milk Marque.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend has no powers so to direct.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will provide an estimate of the funds and total staff time of both the Milk Marketing Board and its subsidiary organisations which have been employed on touring farms to recruit milk producers as members of its successor, Milk Marque.

Mr. Jack: I have no basis on which to make such an estimate.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of milk producers' assets vested in the Milk Marketing Board have so far been expended by the Milk Marketing Board in establishing Milk Marque; and with those permission these funds have been employed.

Mr. Jack: The EC Commission has approved, as a state aid, expenditure by the Milk Marketing Board on the establishment and promotion of Milk Marque totalling about £1·5 million.

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the best estimated number of British fishing vessels that are illegally fishing in United Kingdom waters in contravention of either licensing arrangements under the Sea Fish Licensing Order 1992—SI, 1992 No. 2633—as varied by SI 1993 No. 188 and SI 1993 No. 2291, or registration arrangements under the Merchant Shipping Act 1988.

Mr. Jack: It is impossible to estimate the numbers of vessels that are fishing without licences or while unregistered. Any that come to light will be investigated. The Sea Fish Licensing Order 1992 came into force on 13 November 1992. Since that date, we have taken no prosecutions for fishing without a licence nor for contravention of registration arrangements under the Merchant Shipping Act, but one case is pending.

Cormorants

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications her Department has received in the last 12 months for licences to control cormorant numbers on English fisheries; and how many of these have been approved.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 December 1993]: From 1 December 1992 to 30 November 1993, 49 applications for licences to shoot cormorants were received and 23 licences were granted.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures she is taking to retain the EC moratorium on the use of BST; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make it her policy to secure a seven-year moratorium on the use of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The United Kingdom has always taken the view that the final Community decision on BST should be based on the scientific criteria of safety, quality and efficacy, taking account also of the need to avoid international trading problems, to encourage Community based research industries and to maintain the competitiveness of the Community's agriculture and food based sector. We are considering very carefully the European Commission's recommendation for a ban on the marketing and use of BST against these criteria, and taking into account the representations we have received both for and against a ban, before coming to a view on the matter.

Bananas

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessments he has made of the effectiveness of the new banana régime in benefiting the banana farmers in African, Caribbean and Pacific countries, with particular relevance to the eastern Caribbean; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 10 December 1993]: The new regime has only been in force for a few months and the Community market is taking time to settle down. We hope for a greater degree of stability once the system enters its first full year in January 1994. I am being kept fully aware of developments in the United Kingdom and Community markets and am meeting representatives of the Caribbean Banana Exporters Association next week.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary for Scotland if he will announce the 1994-95 grant-aided expenditure figures for each Scottish local authority.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the 1994-95 grant-aided expenditure figures for each Scottish local authority.

Mr. Lang: The GAE figure in respect of each local authority for 1994-95 is set out in the table. Each authority's allocation of the GAE total has been determined having regard to the client group methodology which is agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in the distribution committee of the working party on local government finance. The table excludes figures for urban programmes GAE which is not allocated to individual authorities. The addition of this amount, £63·4 million, brings the GAE total to the previously announced sum of £5,260·1 million.

Drinking Water

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to publish a report on drinking water quality in Scotland in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: A report has been published today by the Scottish Office Environment Department which gives an overview of drinking water quality in Scotland in 1992. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The report shows that drinking water quality in 1992 has improved since 1991 as a result of the action taken by authorities to deal with water quality problems. In 1992, 98·4 per cent. of all regulatory determinants met the prescribed standards compared with 98 per cent. in 1991. Reported data also showed that for 45 out of 55 numerical standards, 99·7 per cent. of analytical results complied; this is very similar to the results achieved in 1991.

The failures to meet quality standards fully did not represent a risk to public health.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to answer the questions from the hon. Member for Hamilton relating to Greater Glasgow health board tabled for answer on 2 December.

Mr. Lang: The honourable Member's questions were answered on Wednesday 8 December—Official Report, column 285—and today, 14 December.

Intensive Care Units

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill may expect an answer to her questions for written answer on 1 December relating to intensive care units.

Mr. Stewart: The honourable Member's question was answered on 9 December 1993, column 353.

Hunterston

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange for documents held in the Scottish Record Office, currently subject to the 30-year rule, on the subject of steelwork and terminal facilities at Hunterston to be made available for early inspection.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1993]: In accordance with the changes to the criteria governing the closure and retention of files announced in the White Paper on Open Government (Cm 2290), the files in question may be made available for inspection subject to prior approval on a file-by-file basis by the Scottish Office. Such access would also be subject to a commitment on the part of inquirer that any material extracted from the files would be cleared by the Department prior to its delivery, publication or broadcast.

Hospital Services, Glasgow

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangement between Greater Glasgow health board and the Bon Secours hospital for the treatment of patients requiring non-urgent cosmetic surgery, with particular reference to determine (a) whether this work could have been done within the national health service, (b) how much Dr. Peter Summers will be paid, (c) how much the additional plastic surgeon in Canniesburn hospital will be paid, (d) what was the amount of the successful bid from Bon Secours hospital and what was the amount of the next lowest bid and (e) how many patients to be treated at Bon Secours are on Greater Glasgow's health board's waiting list, and how many from other health board areas.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 December 1993]: The answers to points (a) and (e) are set out later. The other points raised over commercial arrangements between the Greater Glasgow health board and the provider. I have arranged for officials of the Scottish Office Home and Health Department to write to the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board to invite him to look into these issues and to respond direct to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill.

(a) Canniesburn hospital recruited an additional consultant plastic surgeon and would therefore be able to treat an extra 800 patients. However, to deliver the waiting time guarantees to all the long waiters more patients would need to be treated and therefore the board sought to establish whether other providers could meet this need. The pre-tendering stage of the competitive tendering exercise carried out by the Greater Glasgow health board attracted 43 expressions of interest from 25 private sector and 18 national health service would-be providers north and south of the border.

(e) The number of patients for whom treatment has been secured under the contract with the Bon Secours Health System are as follows:

Residents of	Number of Patients
Greater Glasgow Health Board	309
Lanarkshire	144
Ayrshire and Arran	33
Argyll and Clyde	60
Forth Valley	19
Dumfries and Galloway	7
TOTAL	572

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date his Department was advised on the intention of Greater Glasgow health board to dismiss its general manager.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 December 1993]: Officials of the Scottish Office learned very late on 2 November that it appeared that Greater Glasgow health board had dismissed its general manager. Formal notification was received on 3 November 1993.

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what payment has been offered to Mr. Laurence Peterken in compensation for leaving Greater Glasgow health board prematurely; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 December 1993]: No payment has been made to Mr. Peterken.

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what day Mr. Lawrence Peterken was offered a post with the national health service executive board.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 December 1993]: Mr. Laurence Peterken was offered the post of special projects director on 12 November 1993.

Court Hearings

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of initial hearings in (a) the Crown courts and (b) in sheriff courts were heard on the scheduled date and at the scheduled time in each year since 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 December 1993]: Among other performance targets, sheriff court staff are required to submit for the approval of their sheriff principal programmes which are designed to provide that the number of summary criminal trials adjourned due to lack of court time do not exceed 5 per cent. of the total number of trials set down. This target was introduced in 1988; and the percentage of sheriff courts meeting the target in the subsequent years is as follows:

	Per cent
Year to 31 March 1989	91
Year to 31 March 1990	91
Year to 31 March 1991	86
Year to 31 March 1992	86
Year to 31 March 1993	87

Information on performance against this and the other targets for the sheriff courts is published annually following the commitments given in the justice charter for Scotland.

Judges

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given to methods of making the appointment of judges more open and democratic; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 December 1993]: The procedures adopted for making judicial appointments are kept under constant review. These procedures are designed to identify in respect of each vacancy the best-fitted candidate. They were recently extended, on a trial basis, by inviting applications for two current vacancies on the shrieval bench through an intimation in the Scots Law Times.

Angling

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons are employed in angling-related occupations, including those employed in the manufacture and sale of angling equipment, hotels, river keepers, gillies and persons involved in sea angling; how many (a) salmon and grilse, (b) sea trout, (c) brown and rainbow trout, (d) coarse fish and (e) sea fish were taken by anglers in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and what is his estimate of the latest value of such items to the Scottish economy.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 December 1993]: The only statistics collected by my Department on these subjects relate to salmon and grilse, and sea trout. The rod and line catches over the last three years are as follows:

	Salmon and Grilse	Sea trout
1990	71,646	27,830
1991	62,450	27,500
1992	82,897	34,315

An independent consultancy report prepared for the Scottish Tourist Board and the Highland and Islands Development Board in 1989 estimated that salmon angling and netting contributed £53 million to the Scottish economy annually and supported 3,800 full-time equivalent jobs.

Direct Service/Labour Organisations

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list, by authority, the surplus achieved since 1988 on trading accounts for (a) general highway work, (b) construction and maintenance of sewers, (c) works of new construction and (d) maintenance work delivered by direct service/labour organisations in Scotland;

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 December 1993]: The information requested for financial years before 1990-91 could be made available only at disproportionate cost. The information set out in table 1 to 3 show for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 the surpluses/deficits reported for each activity to which compulsory competitive tendering relates in terms of both the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988. For 1992-93 the figures provided reflect the reports for that year which have been received and processed.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the representations received from Ayrshire following the publication of his proposal to split the county into two parts in his reorganisation of local government under those who (a) support his proposal, (b) support an all Ayrshire authority and (c) support another option.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 December 1993]: Since publication of the White Paper "Shaping the Future—The New Councils", a total of 43 representations about the restructuring proposals for Ayrshire have been received. One has supported the White Paper proposal; 18 a single Ayrshire authority; 12 other options; and 12 have expressed concern over the proposal without stating a preference.

Forestry

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have been held during the past four months between the Secretary to the interdepartmental review group on the Forestry Commission and representatives of wood processing companies; what has been the context of these discussions; and what indications have been given to those companies about future contracts.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993:] Members of the Forestry Review Group have, from time to time, met representatives of a variety of organisations which have interests of relevance to its work. In many cases, these discussions have been held on a confidential basis at the request of the organisations.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to collect information on the political affiliation of appointees to national health service trusts.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 December 1993]: No. Such information has no relevance to the contribution of appointees to the work of NHS trusts, although I did invite the leaders of all the Scottish parliamentary parties in July 1992 to submit nominations for trust membership.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether rules allow for an enterprise allowance to be granted to an applicant who also takes up a loan guarantee scheme loan.

Mr. McLoughlin: No national restrictions exist to prevent applicants from receiving assistance under both schemes.

Tributyl Trioxide

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the quantity and value of imports, exports and re-exports of tributyl trioxide into, and from, the United Kingdom in the year of the risk benefit study.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is not available as TBTO is not separately identified in the classification of overseas trade statistics.

Innovation Unit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he intends to maintain a post of chief adviser on science and technology; and to which official he intends the innovation unit to report.

Mr. Heseltine: I will make an announcement in due course.

Communications Technologies

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research the Government have conducted on self-trunking technologies in radio communications with a view to requiring less burdensome individual regulations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government recognise the value of self-trunking technology in radiocommunications particularly as this could reduce the need for individual frequency assignments. A number of existing standards —such as CT2—cordless telephones—DECT—digital European cordless telecommunications—and DSRR—digital short range radio—are based on self-trunking principles.

There are technical problems associated with the use of self-trunking for longer range services. The Radiocommunications Agency has undertaken studies on the application of self-trunking for private mobile radio services and further work is being commissioned as part of the agency's programme of research to promote efficient use of the radio spectrum.

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made towards eliminating the need for licences in the case of low-power radio devices.

Mr. McLoughlin: Much progress has been made in eliminating the need for licensing these devices. The statutory instrument "The Wireless Telegraphy (Short Range Devices) (Exemption) Regulations 1993"—SI No. 1993/1591—consolidated previous such regulations and lists the 16 major categories of devices which are licence exempt. Other licensed services are continually reviewed as candidates for exemption.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many bankruptcies were registered by the Insolvency Service for each year since 1986 for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each standard region; and if he will express these figures as a proportion of the total numbers of enterprises in each case.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Details of the number of company and personal insolvencies are compiled for England and Wales as a whole, and for Northern Ireland and Scotland. This information is given in the table. However, it should be noted that a minority of personal bankruptcies do not relate to the failure of enterprises. No regional breakdown of insolvencies in England and Wales is available.

Estimates of the number of enterprises are made by DTI for the United Kingdom as a whole. None was made in 1987, and 1992 figures are not yet available. The table gives these data and expresses the number of insolvencies as a proportion of the number of enterprises. No breakdown of the number of enterprises below United Kingdom level is available.

(1) Company compulsory liquidations and creditors' voluntary liquidations.

(2) Individual bankruptcy orders. Note that a minority of personal bankruptcies do not relate to insolvencies of enterprises.

(3) Sequestrations (equivalent in Scottish law to bankruptcy orders).

Additionality

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received during 1993 in support of adherence to the principle of additionality in allocating European Community funding.

Mr. Sainsbury: I and my ministerial colleagues have received a number of such representations. In all cases, we have been able to give the assurance that the United Kingdom adheres to the principle of additionality.

RAF Chivenor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what additional support he intends to allocate to North Devon for economic development in the light of the Government's proposal to run RAF Chivenor down to a care and maintenance programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Both Barnstaple and Ilfracombe travel-to-work area—TTWA—in which RAF Chivenor is located and the Bideford TTWA were designated as intermediate areas in August 1993. Since 1 August 1993, the Department of Trade and Industry has received six formal requests for regional selective assistance from applicants in north Devon which has already resulted in four offers of assitance. In addition, my officials are talking to several other companies about possible projects. The Government have also proposed to the EC that north Devon should be included in the objective 5(b) programme for Cornwall and Devon.

North Devon will benefit from its share of the £736,779 which was recently allocated to Devon and Cornwall under the Konver programme; indeed, one of the projects which has been approved relates specifically to a "one-stop shop" to help people dependent on RAF Chivenor to find alternative employment.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Her Majesty's Government provided Euratom with (a) system performance demonstration documents and (b) commissioning worksheets for the THORP plant, as part of the establishing of safeguards plans by Euratom.

Mr. Eggar: Documents on safeguards implementation are supplied in confidence by British Nuclear Fuels plc to the parties concerned.

Euratom

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information Her Majesty's Government provided to the European Commission, pursuant to article 78(2) of the Euratom treaty.

Mr. Eggar: None. It is for the operators of facilities using source or special fissile materials to provide information to the European Commission in accordance with article 78 of the Euratom treaty.

Granby Street Post Office, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside and members of the Granby Street Post Office Campaign Group before the Christmas adjournment to discuss the closure of the local post office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The decision to close Granby Street sub-post office is an operational matter for Post Office Counters Ltd. and follows the decision of the sub-postmaster to resign. It would not, therefore, be appropriate for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to discuss the matter with the hon. Member and the Granby Street Campaign Group.

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the criteria of (a) social responsibility and (b) profitability have been applied to the closure of the Granby street post office, in Liverpool.

Mr. McLoughlin: A major factor in the planned closure of the Granby Street sub-post office in Liverpool is the wish of the proprietor of the privately owned business to resign, following repeated robberies in recent years, and the absence of suitable applicants to take over this office. The Post Office has therefore decided to relocate the nearby Lodge lane premises to larger premises some 600 yards from the existing Granby street site. This will accommodate the volume of business transacted at the two sub-post offices.

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had about the proposed closure of the Granby street post office, Liverpool 8, from the Liverpool city council, the Post Office Users Advisory Committee, local councillors and clergymen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In addition to representations from the hon. Member, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received representations from the Liverpool Riverside constituency Labour party, Granby Labour party, Liverpool money advice support unit, Emmanuel holiness church, Princess Park health centre, Princes Park housing co-operative and the Granby Street post Office Campaign.

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the representations which have been sent to the Post Office opposing the proposed closure of Granby street post office, Toxteth, Liverpool 8.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Post Office informs me that it has received representations about the proposed closure of Granby Street sub-post office in Liverpool from the following representatives, bodies and organisations:

Granby Street Campaign Group
Emmanuel Holiness Church
Granby Labour Party
Robert Parry MP
Cllr. J. Rossington St. Michael's and Dingle Ward
Adullam Homes Housing Corporation
University of Liverpool
Princes Park Health Centre
Methodist Church: Liverpool South Central Cllr. G. Ben-Tovim
English Churches Housing Group
Liverpool Riverside Constituency Labour Party
Liverpool Money Advice Support Unit
Ponsonby Neighbourhood Centre
Liverpool Federation of Council Tenants and Residents Associations
Educational Opportunities Initiative in Liverpool 8
Age Concern Liverpool
Granby Liberal Democrats
Princes Park Housing Co-operative Ltd.
Cllr. P. Clein
Father N. Postlethwaite
Trafford Activities Group

In addition, letters have been received from 46 members of the public.

Post Office (Closures)

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what appeal machinery is open against the closure of a post office.

Mr. McLoughlin: Post office closures are an operational matter for Post Office Counters Ltd.

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria are used for the closure of post offices in inner city areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: The criteria used by Post Office Counters Ltd in considering the closure of post offices on the resignation of a subpostmaster or subpostmistress in urban areas are the proximity of other post offices; the difficulty customers would face in reaching another office; the amount and type of business done; the ability of nearby offices to absorb additional work and the likely future development of the area.

Offshore Operators

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he will take to ensure that offshore operating companies are required to have insurance cover to indemnify them against the costs of fines associated with health and safety prosecutions when applying for operating licences; if he will ensure that such requirements are built into licence conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Collieries

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of collieries operated by (a) British Coal and (b) others immediately prior to the restructuring date specified in the Coal Industry Bill.

Mr. Eggar: The operation of collieries is a matter for British Coal Corporation and independent coal producers.

Civil Nuclear Plants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to combat terrorist threats to civil nuclear plants.

Mr. Eggar: Strict physical protection measures which follow international recommendations are in force and these are kept under regular review to ensure their continuing effectiveness. It is Government policy not to disclose the detail of the measures which are taken.

Electricity Imports

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library copies of all correspondence and written agreements which he and his Department have had with Electricité de France or with the French Government about the import of electricity.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 December 1993]: The Government are not a party to the agreements governing trade in electricity between Britain and France, which are summarised in the coal review White Paper, Cm 2235, from paragraph 7.95. Since the publication of the White paper the Government have had further discussions with the French authorities on the non-leviable status of electricity imports from France, the transparency of the French energy market, and access for British generators to export electricity to and through France.

Patent Office

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the Patent Office.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 10 December 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 9 December 1993, Official Report, column 348.

Small Firms

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about his Department's assistance to small firms to achieve BS5750 standards.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 December 1993]: BS5750 is a voluntary standard and the decision to seek certification is a matter for individual companies. However, help for small firms to achieve BS5750 is available through my Department's enterprise initiative consultancy scheme under which DTI will pay up to half the cost of specialist help lasting up to 15 days. Also, the relevance of the standard and its relationship to total quality management and company competitiveness is highlighted in the "Managing in the 90s" programme; an awareness programme promoting an integrated approach to best management practice.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total annual amount of public funds that is used to underwrite small firms finance loans through the banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The net cost of the scheme for the period April 1982 to March 1993 was £185·5 million, shown below by financial year. No figures are available for the period June 1981 to March 1982.

National Measurement System

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what his Department's expenditure was on the national measurement system in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93; what is the comparable forecast expenditure for the succeeding three years; and what is the comparable planned increased expenditure from 1991-92.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 December 1993]: My Department spent £41·2 million on the national measurement system in 1991-92, and £42·2 million in 1992-93. We expect an outturn of £42 million for 1993-94. The budgets for the following two years have not yet been finalised.

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations have been received from industry calling for the national physical laboratory and the national measurement system to be retained and adequately funded; and what account will be taken of those views.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The CBI and the instrumentation and control trade association, GAMBICA, have made clear their support for my Department's objective of providing a well-founded measurement infrastructure as an underpinning factor in UK competitiveness and the importance they attach to its continuation. A number of companies have made similar points to my Department. These views will be fully taken into account as we develop our policy in the area. My Department also engages consultants to canvas a wide range of opinion in industry on the appropriate areas of work under the national measurement system when the various programmes funded by the Department come up for renewal.

EDUCATION

Hasmonean Preparatory School

12. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to determine the application by Hasmonean prep school to become voluntary aided.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend expects to announce a decision shortly.

Educational Performance, London

13. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what initiatives he plans to take to improve educational performance in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Parents and pupils in London, as elsewhere, are benefiting from the Government's policies on the national curriculum, local management, and self-governing status for schools. The new four-yearly independent inspection cycle will enable us to monitor standards and take effective action where individual schools are proving inadequate.

Truancy

15. Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to reduce the level of truancy in schools.

Mr. Patten: Parents are responsible in law for securing their children's regular attendance at school and local education authorities are responsible for ensuring that they do so. The Department is supporting the work of LEAs and schools in this area under the reducing truancy programme of the grants for education support and training scheme. In 1993-94, projects are being funded in 71 LEAs to a value of £9·6 million.

24. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about his Department's policy on truancy.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend expects local education authorities and schools to make maximising attendance one of their key tasks. To help them, the Department is currently supporting projects to a value of some £9·6 million in 71 English local education authorities under the reducing truancy component of the grants for education support and training scheme 1993-94.

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each local education authority (a) the school population, (b) the number of prosecutions for truancy in the latest available year and (c) the average truancy rate for schools, excluding independent schools, in each area.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested on the school population and average rate of unauthorised absence for each LEA is published in the "National Unauthorised Absence Tables 1992-93", copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on the number of prosecutions for truancy is not collected centrally.

Student Loans

16. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions he has had with the Student Loans Company regarding the ability of former students to repay their loans.

Mr. Boswell: I and my officials have frequent discussions with the Student Loans Company about a wide range of issues, including matters relating to the repayment of loans.

Nursery Education

14. Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will meet the Association of County Councils to discuss the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has not received any recent request from the Association of County Councils for a meeting to discuss nursery education. Department for Education officials are periodically in touch with the association on educational matters.

17. Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the provision of nursery education.

21. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to extend the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Chisholm).

Sixth Forms

18. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to encourage more schools to develop the use of sixth forms.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend intends shortly to publish a framework of criteria to guide his future decisions on proposals for new sixth forms. The extension of choice and diversity will have a central place in this framework as well as need, effectiveness and cost.

School Uniforms

19. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to make uniforms compulsory in schools.

Mr. Patten: The Government believe that school uniforms can help foster a sense of responsibility and encourage high standards and good behaviour, but it is for individual governing bodies to decide whether to require the wearing of uniforms by their pupils. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State has no plans to make uniforms compulsory in maintained schools.

Student Unions

20. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received about Government proposals to remove automatic funding for student unions and student welfare services.

25. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent representations he has had about his proposals regarding student unions.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received about 3,000 representations since he announced the Government's proposals for student union reform on 1 July. Our proposals provide for core students union services, including welfare, to be available to all students and supported with public funds, where universities and colleges choose to provide those services in that way.

Grant-maintained Schools

22. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools there are in Hampshire; how many have voted against grant-maintained status; and how many further applications there are.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are currently 25 self-governing schools in Hampshire and a further five which have been approved for self-governing status and will join the sector in January. One school has an application in the pipeline having voted yes. Six schools have returned a no vote in parental ballots to date, but one of these re-balloted and is self-governing. One school is due to hold a ballot before Christmas.

Special Educational Needs

23. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the staffing implications for schools and local education authorities in implementing the draft code of practice for special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: The draft code of practice, which reflects expert advice and seeks to codify existing good practice, is presently subject to extensive consultation. My right hon. Friend and I will consider all representations received during the consultation process before laying a revised version of the code before Parliament.

Teacher Training Agency

26. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received concerning his proposals for the financing of educational research through the Teacher Training Agency.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have received some 60 representations on this issue from a wide range of bodies. Our proposals will be given full parliamentary scrutiny during the passage of the Education Bill which last week was given a Second Reading in another place.

Parental Choice

27. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on parental choice of school.

Mr. Robin Squire: All parents have the right, in accordance with the principles of the parents charter, to express a preference for a choice of school. In an estimated 90 per cent. of cases that preference is met. The Government's policies aim to extend choice and diversity throughout the education system.

Departmental Staff

28. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy towards recruitment and retention of senior staff in his Department.

Mr. Boswell: Most senior appointments in the Department are filled by internal moves and promotions or by staff transferring from other Departments. The Department for Education's personnel policies aim to retain and develop staff to do the work which is required in a Department of this size.

The Government's response to the recommendations of the recent efficiency unit report on career management and succession planning, due in the spring, will have a bearing on future arrangements.

Higher Education

29. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to introduce a corporate levy as a means of funding expansion in higher education.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have no plans to do so. As announced in his statement at the time of the unified Budget on 30 November, my right hon. Friend has decided that the current level of participation in higher education, which is close to the target for the end of the decade, can be funded through an adjustment in the sharing of the overall cost of student maintenance between taxpayer and students.

Technology Grants

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what criteria Stratford school was judged in its successful bid for a technology grant; what other schools in Newham made a bid; and which were successful.

Mr. Robin Squire: Bids for awards under the technology schools initiative, including the one from Stratford school, were judged on behalf of the Department by a team of professional technologists using the same national criteria. In the two years in which TSI awards were made, Newham local education authority put forward three bids on behalf of its schools. The bid from Sarah Bonnell school was successful.

School Day

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the length of the school day in each European Union state; and what evidence he has about the link between the length of the school day and standards as achieved by students in each EU country.

Mr. Robin Squire: Comparable information on the length of the school day in other countries is not held centrally. Some relevant information can be found in the National Foundation for Educational Research's 1992 report "Learning Mathematics and Science: The Second International Assessment of Educational Progress in England", a copy of which is in the Library. Further information will be available in a forthcoming Eurydice publication, "Organisation of School Time in Member States of the European Community", which is expected to be published by the end of the year.

Initial work carried out in my Department indicates on average a small but statistically significant positive correlation between the length of the taught week—as opposed to the length of the school day or week—and educational performance as measured by public examinations and national tests.

Details of relevant research carried out in other EU member states are not held centrally.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to review the position of corporal punishment in local authority schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from parents requesting the reintroduction of corporal punishment into local authority schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend receives occasional representations from parents and others on the subject of corporal punishment, both for and against its reintroduction in maintained schools.

Greater London Schools

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schools he has visited in the Greater London area since his appointment as Secretary of State.

Mr. Patten: Since April 1992, I have visited eleven schools in the Greater London area. These are the Archbishop Tennison Secondary School, Croydon; Bishop Thomas Grant Secondary School, Streatham, Lambeth; Chingford Hall Primary School, Waltham Forest; Compton Secondary School, Finchley, Barnet; Greenvale Primary School, Croydon; The Hague Primary School, Tower Hamlets; Hasmonean School, Barnet; Islamia Primary School, Brent; Marymount International Secondary School, Kingston; Mulberry School for Girls, Tower Hamlets, and Wimbledon College, Merton.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total budget for the Further Education Funding Council for 1992-93 and for 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The figures requested for grant to the Further Education Funding Council are as follows:

	1992-93	1993-94	£ million 1994-95 (planned)
Recurrent	24·5	2,549·2	2,679·5
Capital	—	151·8	157·0
TOTAL	24·5	2,701·0	2,836·5

The funding made available in 1992-93, prior to the establishment of the new further education sector on 1 April 1993, provided transitional funds to help institutions prepare for independence and to meet the costs of establishing the council.

Sex Education (Primary Schools)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what academic studies he has consulted on the effects on children of sex education in primary schools; and if these studies showed the effects on children of this age to have been beneficial or detrimental and over what period.

Mr. Robin Squire: Research findings in this area show that the majority of parents support the provision of some form of sex education in primary school, but the evidence for its effects is inconclusive. We believe that in this sensitive area the decision whether, and from what age, to offer sex education in maintained primary schools is best left to the discretion of the governing body of each school and that parents should have the right to withdraw their children from sex education if they so wish.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total budget for the Higher Education Funding Council for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The Higher Education Funding Council for England assumed responsibility for funding universities and colleges in England from 1 April 1993. The planned capital and recurrent grant for the council announced in the Budget is £2,789 million for 1993-94 and £3,418 million for 1994-95. The latter includes compensation for the reduction in publicly funded tuition fees in 1994-95.

School Inspection

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the revision of the OFSTED framework for school inspection will be complete; what the policy for inspection of religious education will be; what the proposals are for the inspection of sex education within the framework; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Inspections of schools under the Education (Schools) Act 1992, are required to report on the quality of education and standards achieved, and that in curricular and other matters, schools meet legal requirements.

The detailed content of the framework for inspection is a matter for Professor Sutherland.

I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to my hon. Friend.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total budget for grant-maintained schools for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is set out in the table.

Total Spending on GM Schools[1]	485	1,150	2,000

[1] Figures include annual maintenance grant, which is recovered from local authorities, special purpose grants and capital grants.

[2] Actual spending will depend on the number and size of grant maintained schools.

Exam Results

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to publish schools' GCSE and A-level results by chronological age rather than by school year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 1993 school and college performance tables show the examination results of students at schools and further education sector colleges by age group only. My right hon. Friend will give further consideration in due course to this and other issues relating to the future publication of comparative tables, and will be consulting interested parties.

Schools Visits, Bolton

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Education who issued the invitations to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Schools to visit Bolton schools on 2 December; who was informed of the visit; and if he will set out the protocol for informing the local authority of future ministerial visits to Bolton.

Mr. Forth: I visited a number of schools in Bolton at the invitation of my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham). The programme for my visit was organised by my hon. Friend's office and I was very happy to follow it. The authority was informed of my forthcoming visit by a headteacher of one of the schools involved. If visits are arranged by my office, it is normal practice to involve the local education authority from the start.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans he has to make students responsible for meeting any or all of the costs of tuition fees; what is the time scale for these plans; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what estimates his Department has made of the debt students are likely to incur during each year of their academic studies if they are required to take out additional loans to pay tuition fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's plans for higher education were set out in the Budget. Public funding will be over £4·6 billion next year. The costs of higher education will in future be shared more fairly between graduates and the taxpayer by accelerating the shift in the balance of student maintenance support from grant to loan. The Government will continue to reimburse tuition fees through the mandatory awards system up to specified maximum levels. We have no plans to make students contribute to tuition fees.

Voluntary-aided Schools (Transport)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to prevent local education authorities from withdrawing financial assistance towards transport from children in voluntary-aided schools on purely denominational grounds.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government attach importance to the preservation of the opportunity to choose a school in accordance with religious convictions. Since 1 October, local education authorities have been obliged to have regard, in considering whether or not to provide a child with free school transport, to—among other things—the parent's wishes for him to attend a school of the denomination to which the parent adheres.

Fitzherbert School, Brighton

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what legal and other expenses were incurred in acquiring and disposing of the site of the former Fitzherbert school, Brighton.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has reimbursed the CTC Trust some £91,300 for expenses connected with acquiring and disposing of this site.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received on the operation of the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Between April 1993 and November 1993 the Department of Social Security headquarters and the Child Support Agency headquarters received in the region of 6,400 written representations covering a range of views about child support policy and Child Support Agency operations.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Child Support Agency to take into account, when deciding maintenance payments, the costs of an absent parent's contact with their child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The assessment formula used by the Child Support Agency allows for essential expenses. To make allowances for specific items of expenditure would be to give these costs precedence over a child's basic maintenance. Most absent parents will retain between 70 per cent. and 85 per cent. of their net income after paying maintenance.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown of the representations received regarding the operation of the Child Support Agency on the basis of (a) sex of the applicant and (b) region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt [pursuant to his reply, 30 November, col. 429]: The information given was incorrect. The Department received in the region of 6,400 written representations about child support, and not 3,000 as previously stated.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate for 1993-94 of the numbers of (a) men and (b) women with earnings below (i) the tax threshold and (ii) the national insurance contribution thresholds, in (y) Great Britain and (z) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table:

(thousands)

	Great Britain	Northern Ireland
(i) Men	900	30
Women	2,600	70
(ii) Men	900	30
Women	2,300	60

Note: Figures for Great Britain are rounded to the nearest hundred thousand.

Young People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds received housing benefit in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: It is estimated that about 1,000 16 and 17-year-olds received housing benefit in Scotland in 1990, 1991 and 1992. Figures for Scotland prior to 1990 and for Dundee are not available.

Source: Housing Benefit Management Information System annual 1 per cent. sample survey.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the amounts of income support to which (a) 16 and 17-year-olds with an automatic right to benefit, (b) 18 to 24-year-olds and (c) people aged 25 years or over, were entitled in each of the past five years.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Income Support Rate

	For 16 to 17-year-olds living at home £	For single 18 to 24 year-olds and 16 to 17-year olds living independently £	For people 25 years and over and 18 to 24-year-old lone parents £
April 1989	20·80	27·40	34·90
April 1990	21·90	28·80	36·70
April 1991	23·65	31·15	39·65
October 1991	23·90	31·40	39·65
April 1992	25·55	33·60	42·45
April 1993	26·45	34·80	44·00

Notes: The higher rate of IS for 16 to 17-year-olds is available only if claimants are living independently out of necessity or if they are disabled. This rate became available to 16 to 17-year-olds on 10 July 1989.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit as a result of vibration white finger have been rejected in each of the last five years because the process by which the claimant contracted the condition is not covered by the prescribed list of occupation diseases.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the report of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council currently studying hand-arm vibration syndrome.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the council has not yet completed its study and does not expect to do so for some time.

Lone Parents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider introducing non-means-tested benefits for lone parents who are not covered by insurance contributions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: One parent benefits is a non-means-tested and non-contributory supplement to child benefit which is already available to all lone parents. It is currently received by nearly 1 million families.

Contributory Benefits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider increasing contributory benefits for people aged over 80 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: We have no plans to increase contributory benefits for this group of pensioners over and above the proposed general increase in state retirement pension announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in his statement to the House on 1 December.

Pensions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider restoring the links between pensions and average earnings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: We have no such plans.

Social Fund

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons are now employed by the independent review service of the social fund; and what is the annual cost to public funds of the services provided by that body.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the social fund commissioner that there are currently 162 staff employed by the independent review service. The estimated running cost expenditure for 1993-94 is £3,960,000. Available information on previous years' running costs is published in the social fund commissioner's annual reports.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases or appeals have been referred back to local offices by the independent review service in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and how many of these referrals have resulted in a change in the decision of local social fund officers.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the social fund commissioner that in 1993-94—April to November—2,370 cases were referred back to the Benefits Agency for redetermination. Information on the number of such referrals that resulted in a change in the original social fund officer's decision is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Credit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of lone parents with a child aged under 11 years and in receipt of family credit are receiving the maximum amount of family credit;

(2) what proportion of lone parents with a child aged under 11 years receiving less than the maximum amount for family credit are receiving between the maximum amount and £28 less than the maximum amount.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables.

Family Credit lone parents with child aged under 11	134,760	42,380	3[illegible]45

	All cases	Number receiving between maximum FC and £28 less than maximum FC	Percentage receiving between maximum FC and £28 less than maximum FC
Family Credit lone parents with child aged under 11	134,760	55,260	41·01

Note: Information as at 30 April 1993. Based on 5 per cent. sample of awards.

Nude Models

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy on the suggestion to benefit recipients that they should seek work as nude models; whether this policy applies to women only; how many (a) men and (b) women have received such advice from benefits office staff; and what information on vacancies for such work is held centrally.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefit is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurence to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 13 December 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away on annual leave at the moment, I am replying on his behalf to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about the suggestion to benefit recipients that they should seek work as nude models.

A person in receipt of an incapacity benefit may be considered capable of suitable work following a medical examination. Such decisions are made by Adjudication Officers (AO), who are independent adjudicating authorities.

If the AO decides that a person is capable of work, then, as a result of a long standing Commissioner's decision, the AO is required to specify the type of work that person is considered capable of doing.

Although a job description of "Artists model", which included that of nude modelling, was contained in a previous publication used by AOs as a source of job example, that source was superseded in February 1993 by the Standard Occupational Classification. This publication, which is in the Library, does not include a description of the variety of work possibly undertaken by an "Artists model".

The specific information asked for is, therefore, not available in the format requested.

I hope my reply has been helpful.

DEFENCE

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to raise the matter of the safeguarding of surplus military plutonium at the NATO defence ministers meeting in Brussels on 9 and 10 December.

Mr. Aitken: A range of issues was discussed at the Defence Planning Committee and Nuclear Planning Group meetings on 8 and 9 December. A copy of the communiqué issued after the meetings has been placed in the Library of the House.

Artillery Systems

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) of 1 December, Official Report, column 605, on 14 Calibre Artillery systems, if the SPLLS were delivered to the British Army of the Rhine via the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: No.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what categories of damage are included in aircraft accident rates per 10,000 flying hours listed in "UK Defence Statistics 1993", table 3.8; and if the recalculation of the numbers of accidents referred to in footnote 1 to table 3.8 applies to Royal Navy and Army aircraft as well as those of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Hanley: The categories of damage included in aircraft accident routes per 10,000 flying hours noted in UK Defence Statistics 1993, table 3.8, are categories 4 and 5. No recalculation was necessary for Royal Navy or Army aircraft.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what form the data on aircraft accidents and accident rates forming the basis of table 3·8 of the publication "United Kingdom Defence Statistics 1993" were supplied by the service safety organisations to his Department's statistical services; and what are the differences in format since the 1992 edition of the document.

Mr. Hanley: Data on serious aircraft accidents are passed to the Defence Analytical Services Agency by signal immediately after the event. Written confirmation of the contents of tables 3·8 and 3·9 is sought from the service flight safety organisations before publication of "Defence Statistics". Flying hours, by aircraft type, are provided by the services.

There are no differences in the formats of table 3·8 and 3·9 since the 1992 edition.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why aircraft accident rate information for the years 1975 and 1980, in table 3·8 of "United Kingdom Defence Statistics 1993", is only available for some aircraft types; what records exist within his Department on the number of flying hours and the number of major accidents for each aircraft type for the years 1975 and 1980; and what plans he has to include additional information in the 1994 edition of "United Kingdom Defence Statistics".

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to include additional information in table 3·8 of the 1994 edition of the United Kingdom Defence Statistics.

The accident rate information for 1980 in table 3·8 of United Kingdom Defence Statistics 1993 is complete. The numbers of accidents in 1975 in each service are published in the first part of table 3·8. The flying hours for individual aircraft types flown by the Royal Navy and Army are not readily available.

Upavon Army Base

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the designated role and purpose of the new Army base at Upavon, Wiltshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The headquarters organisation of the Army's inspector general doctrine and training has collocated in Upavon from eight separate locations in the United Kingdom. The primary role and purpose of the organisation is to formulate a coherent military doctrine; to ensure the translation of that doctrine into training policy and the implementation of individual training and training support to meet it.

Flying Hours

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of flying hours flown per aircrew per year in RAF front-line strike/attack/reconnaissance units in each year since 1987.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Year	Strike/Attack	Reconnaissance
1987	434	228
1988	469	245
1989	457	241
1990	463	251
1991	398	218
1992	447	235
[1]1993	375	199

[1] to end of Oct 93

Nimrod

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Nimrod aircraft was first certified to carry nuclear weapons; and whether this certification applied to the United Kingdom as well as United States weapons.

Mr. Hanley: The Nimrod aircraft was certified for carriage of American nuclear depth charges from its entry into service in 1969. It has never been certified to carry British nuclear weapons.

Combat-ready Aircrew

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if instructor aircrew in the Harrier, Jaguar, Tornado and Hawk reserve squadrons are required to maintain combat-ready status.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Housing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 173, (1) on what consideration he bases his policy of not revealing the future expenditure plans of MoD budget holders at the level of detail requested;

(2) whether he has considered changing his policy regarding the release of detailed information on the future expenditure plans of MoD budget holders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The 10-year costing of the defence programme, known as the long-term costing, upon which details of future expenditure plans are based, is designed for internal planning purposes only. Approval to commit expenditure is subject to separate procedures and endorsement by Ministers as appropriate. To avoid giving a misleading impression as to the firmness of our plans, therefore, we would not normally provide such details. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to change this policy.

Defence Costs Study

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official report, column 176, if he will list each of the aspects of support that he will be looking at as part of the defence costs study; and if he will provide detailed information on their current functions and costs.

Mr. Aitken: At this stage, I have nothing to add to my previous answer.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 176, how long the defence costs study will take; and if he will publish a declassified copy of their work once it has been completed.

Mr. Aitken: No overall timetable has been set, since the time needed to look at different areas of defence support will vary considerably. Work is, however, being taken forward as quickly as possible. We will decide how best to make public the results of the study as soon as we have had the opportunity to consider them.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 176, what are (a) the current headquarters costs, (b) the current manpower costs and (c) current procurement practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Details of defence expenditure are given in the publication "UK Defence Statistics: 1993 Edition". Table 1.3 gives planned expenditure for 1993-94 in each of the management areas. The total figure for MOD headquarters and centrally managed expenditure is £1,886·3 million. Table 1.2 shows that anticipated expenditure on service and civilian personnel this year is £9,716 million. The fullest and most recent description of current procurement practice is in "Britain's Defence Procurement", a booklet published by my Department in July 1993. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 176, how many staff will be employed on a full-time basis on the defence costs study.

Mr. Aitken: A secretariat with eight full-time members has been established to co-ordinate work on the study. The work itself will be carried out by a number of small study teams, each looking at different areas of support business. Some staff will work full-time on the study as members of these teams.

Married Quarters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money he has spent over the last two years on upgrading the physical condition of married quarters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received and what consultations he has had in relation to the setting up of a local liaison committee for the atomic weapons establishment, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have received one representation from the director of environmental services, Cardiff city council, concerning the setting up of a local liaison committee for AWE Cardiff. I am pleased to announce that following an exploratory meeting with local authority representatives the inaugural meeting of the local liaison committee for AWE Cardiff is scheduled for 24 January 1994.

Nuclear Warhead Convoy (Breakdown)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the breakdown on the M25 of the nuclear warhead convoy vehicle on 9 December.

Mr. Hanley: A military convoy stopped on the M25 on 9 December to allow the inspection of a suspected mechanical defect on one vehicle. As a precautionary safety measure, the civil police cordoned off the inner lane of the motorway.

Following the inspection, the tractor unit of one of the vehicles was changed and the convoy continued its journey and arrived safely at its destination. It is a long-standing policy neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons at any particular place or time.

Spent Polaris Warheads

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines he has agreed for the transportation by road, rail and shipping for spent Polaris nuclear warheads from Faslane to the atomic weapons establishment, Burghfield and for warheads of parts thereof to AWE Aldermaston and Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Nuclear warheads, and their components, can be transported by road, sea or air. Appropriate safety and security procedures are applied to all such movements.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many shipments have taken place from Faslane to atomic weapons establishments at Burghfield, Aldermaston and Cardiff of spent Polaris nuclear warheads for decommissioning, decontamination and disposal; what proposals he has for future programmes of this kind; and if he will make a statement on his proposals for amendments to the relevant nuclear site licences.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our policy to discuss movements of nuclear warheads. The question of licensing under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 does not arise: under the AWE Act 1991, AWE sites are not subject to such licensing.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Customs and Excise controls are exercised on the entry of aircraft or warships.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

Crew and any passengers on military aircraft and naval vessels declare goods as required and pay any charges due. Declarations are also provided of any cargo and stores. Customs and Excise perform selective anti-smuggling checks in conjunction with the relevant naval or military body.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Expenditure on advertising prior to 1987-88 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Expenditure on advertising for each year from 1987-88 is as follows:

1987-88	4,978
1988-89	3,888
1989-90	5,483
1990-91	5,174
1991-92	22,698
1992-93	15,962

Expenditure for each of the past 12 months is as follows:

November	328
December	375
1993
January	—
February	—
March	14,901
April	352

October	989

Magistrates

Mr. James Hill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to ensure independence of justices' clerks when advising magistrates, other than in individual cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I are entirely committed to protecting the independence of justices' clerks when advising magistrates. The legislation which with Parliament's approval will implement the White Paper, "A New Framework for Local Justice", will establish a framework within which the respective roles and responsibilities of justices' clerks and their magistrates courts committees can be clarified. The legislation will also make clear that justices' clerks are not liable to direction in respect of the legal advice given to magistrates in court.

Mr. James Hill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will now publish the text of the proposed statutory provisions regarding the judicial independence of magistrates and the independence of legal advice given to magistrates by their clerks in individual cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Bill which will implement the White Paper, "A New Framework for Local Justice", is expected to be introduced to the House before the Christmas recess, after which the full text will be published in accordance with the usual procedure.

Efficiency Commission

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the implications of the recommendations of the Efficiency Commission on the cost of legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Efficiency Commission has, since it was set up in 1986, made a number of recommendations designed to improve the operation of the criminal legal aid system. It is not possible to produce a precise figure for the implications which those recommendations which have been accepted have had on the cost of legal aid. It is, however, likely that the resulting savings have been small relative to total expenditure on criminal legal aid.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current time scale for the work of the Efficiency Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is currently no timetable assigned to the work of the Standing Commission on Efficiency.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which proposals of the Efficiency Commission have been implemented since its establishment.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Standing Commission on Efficiency is made up of senior representatives from the Bar, the Law Society, the Crown Prosecution Service and the Lord Chancellor's Department. It has provided a forum for the formulation and discussion of ways of enhancing communication between the legal profession and the courts and thereby improving the disposal of criminal business. The commission has considered a large number of papers on a wide range of topics with the common aim of speeding up or streamlining both pre-trial processes and in-court procedures. In 1990 each of the members of the Efficiency Commission published a "Guide to Good Practice", which drew together the discussions of the group and provided reference documents in which each agency set out how it would discharge its responsibility to provide an efficient and effective service. The best practices set out there inform the practical operation of a wide range of services carried out by practitioners and courts. The commission has also been instrumental in devising a form for the provision of information by defence solicitors to assist courts when making listing decisions. A research project into the causes of delay in criminal proceedings was commissioned earlier this year. The findings of that research were submitted to the Royal Commission on criminal justice, and consideration and implementation of any of its recommendations will take place in the context of the discussion of the wide-reaching proposals of the Royal Commission.

Costs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what complaints he has received about delays in the taxing and payment of (a) expedited costs and (b) other costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In relation to costs in civil proceedings in the High Court and the county courts, I have received no more than 20 written complaints about delays in taxation over the last 12 months. Payment of costs in civil proceedings is a matter for the parties. The courts provide a range of procedures which can be used to enforce an order for costs, but it is for the parties to decide whether they want to use them.

With regard to the delays in the taxing and payment of costs in criminal proceedings, the information is not recorded under this particular definition. The best available information shows that I have received nine complaints from Members of Parliament and 12 complaints from members of the public this year.

No central record is kept of the number of complaints which may be received by the courts direct.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to improve the efficiency of the administration of justice in respect of the prompt taxing and payment of costs awarded by (a) the High Court and (b) other courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Delays in respect of civil taxations have been reduced generally over the last eighteen months. The situation is being kept under review and remedial steps will be taken, if necessary. On the question of payment of costs in civil proceedings, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to an earlier, related question.

In respect of improving efficiency in the payment of costs in criminal proceedings, targets are in place for the payment of those costs which are being met nationally. Some problems have been experienced by the south-eastern circuit taxing teams and additional resources have been provided to assist them in meeting the targets set. Additionally, my officials are currently looking at how the standard fee system in the Crown court may be extended.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to award Rainbow the management of the national lottery.

Mr. Sproat: None. The licence to run the national lottery will be awarded by the director general after a competitive process.

BBC Northern Ireland

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many redundancies have been effected in all grades in BBC Northern Ireland in each year from 1 April 1983 to 31 March 1993.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from the BBC that the information is not readily available before 1991. The total number of redundancies in BBC Northern Ireland in each of the last three years is as follows:

	Number
1991	105
1992	4

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many people were employed in BBC Northern Ireland in all grades in each year from 1 April 1983 to 31 March 1993.

Mr. Brooke: [illegible] understand from the BBC that the information is not readily available before 1987. The total number of people employed in BBC Northern Ireland in each of the last seven years, in December, is as follows:

	Numbers
1987	701
1988	675
1989	697
1990	671
1991	566
1992	570
1993	533

Radio Stations

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list radio stations which are wholly or mainly aimed at serving ethnic minority listeners.

Mr. Brooke: The following radio stations are wholly or mainly aimed at serving ethnic minority listeners:

Choice FM (South London)
Harmony Radio (Coventry)
London Greek Radio (North London)
Spectrum Radio (Londonwide)
Sunrise East Midlands (Leicester)
Sunrise FM (Bradford)
Sunrise Radio (West London[1])
WNK Radio (North London)

[1] Londonwide from 1 January 1994).

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many radio stations serve each of the cities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Dundee, Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool and Sheffield.

Mr. Brooke: The table lists the number of services which are specifically designed to serve the whole of each named city.

	BBC		Independent
	National	Local/Regional	National	Local/Regional
Glasgow	5	1	2	[1]3
Edinburgh	5	1	2	[1]3
Aberdeen	5	1	2	[1]2
Dundee	5	1	2	[1]2
Birmingham	5	1	2	[1]3
Manchester	5	1	2	[1]5
Liverpool	5	1	2	[1]3
Sheffield	5	1	2	2

[1] Includes services which are licensed but not yet on air.

In addition, there are services which can be heard in part of each city or received from neighbouring areas.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which major British cities have a radio station licensed to serve the entire metropolitan area.

Mr. Brooke: Every major British city has at least one licensed local radio service.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his policy on the provision of small community radio stations.

Mr. Brooke: Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, the Radio Authority licenses independent radio stations, including stations to serve small communities. It is for the authority to decide how to carry out its responsibilities.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research and Development

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the distribution of funds between countries and projects in the fourth framework programme for research and development of the European Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: The fourth framework programme has not yet been adopted. Statistical information on the distribution of funds will not be available until individual programmes within the overall framework have been implemented and operational for some time.

Acts of Parliament

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for how long published copies of individaul Acts of Parliament are available; and whether he will consider more extensive publication as an initiative under the citizens charter.

Mr. Davis: HMSO aims as a minimum to keep all Acts of Parliament in print for at least three years. Thereafter individual acts are normally reprinted, provided there is sufficient demand. Where an Act goes out of print, HMSO can supply photocopies. In addition, HMSO can supply copies of any unrepealed Act in the version appearing in "Statutes in Force."

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Works of Art

Mr. Cormack: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed (Mr. Beith), representing the House of Commons Commission, what changes have been made to the membership of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art.

Mr. Beith: I understand that Madam Speaker has appointed to the Advisory Committee on Works of Art the right hon. Member for Horsham (Sir Peter Hordern) in place of the right hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon).

Overnight Sleeping Accommodation

Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), representing the House of Commons Commission, what is his policy on the provision of overnight sleeping accommodation for staff; what is the annual cost of providing overnight sleeping accommodation for staff; and what alternatives have been considered for (a) uses of the allocated sleeping accommodation and (b) arranging overnight staff accommodation in local hotels.

Mr. Beith: Overnight sleeping accommodation is provided for essential staff of the House who are required to be on duty at late hours. The only costs arising directly from this provision are those for laundry, which at present cannot readily be separately identified. There is no plan to alter existing arrangements.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Attorney-General if he will outline the procedures governing the use of public interest immunity certificates.

The Attorney-General: Public interest immunity is a rule of evidence developed by the courts which is designed to prevent documents being disclosed in criminal or civil litigation if harm would result to the operation of the public service. It applies equally to all parties to litigation, irrespective of whether production would help or hinder their case. A claim for public interest immunity cannot be waived and in the case of the Crown is usually made by way of ministerial certificate. Such a certificate is not conclusive. Each claim is considered by the court which may, and in a criminal case must, inspect the documents. The court considers first whether the claim is in principle a valid one and, if so, must then go on to consider whether the interests of justice in the particular case require that the public interest in maintaining confidentiality be overridden. The decision whether or not to override the public interest in maintaining confidentiality is for the court to make; it is not for the party claiming immunity.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

World Food Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the budget of the world food programme in 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The overall turnover of the world food programme in 1993 will be some US$2 billion. This includes both the programme support and administration budget, project spending, contributions in cash to trust funds and contributions in kind, which will provide some 4·5 million tonnes of food commodities.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy initiatives he is urging upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations to promote the long-term recovery of Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All donors had a full opportunity to express their views on the rehabilitation of Somalia at the humanitarian conference organised by the United Nations in Addis Ababa from 29 November to 1 December. We now await the report from the Secretary-General called for in Security Council resolution 886 of 18 November.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the value of the ODA and EC aid and development programme in Somalia, excluding the area of the former British Somalia, in the current financial year;

(2) what is the ODA and EC aid and development programme in the former British Somalia—Somaliland—in the current financial year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain's bilateral development programme to Somalia was terminated in 1991, since when there has been residual expenditure only. In November 1993, the EC approved a rehabilitation programme for the whole of Somalia worth about £29 million. The UK share will be £4·7 million.

Both Britain and the EC have provided substantial amounts of humanitarian assistance to Somalia this year. Since January 1993, Britain has committed more than £9·5 million in bilateral humanitarian assistance to Somalia, of which more than £1 million has so far been allocated to activities in the north-west. The EC has provided £9·2 million in emergency assistance to Somalia, of which the UK share is £1·5 million. EC expenditure by region is not available.

EC Development Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 6 December, Official Report, column 76, what were the voting figures recorded in the meeting of the European Community's Development Council held on 2 December.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The resolutions of the Development Council on 2 December were adopted by consensus, as is the normal practice.

PRIME MINISTER

Former Members

Mr. Meale: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list by ministerial department how many former hon. Members have been appointed to salaried positions in Government bodies since 1979, giving details in each case.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

European Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Council of 10 and 11 December indicating the voting record of each member of state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement I made following the European Council on 13 December. The task of the European Council, as set out in the treaty on European union, is to provide the union with the necessary impetus for its development and to define general political guidelines. It does not vote; its decisions are taken by consensus. Legislative decisions under the treaties are taken by the Council of Ministers.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what the cost of advertising by his office has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

The Prime Minister: None.

Honours Review

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Prime Minister what is the outcome of the review of honours numbers which he announced in his statement on honours of 4 March, Official Report, columns 453-63.

The Prime Minister: The review has been completed, and the outcome has been graciously approved by the Queen. The review considered the number of honours required for my list, the diplomatic service and overseas list and the defence services list, at each half-year for six years, 1994 to 1999 inclusive. As a result of the review, the number of awards available for the recognition of all forms of voluntary service will be increased by about 100 in my list, and by 20 in the diplomatic service and overseas list. The increase will be broadly matched by a reduction in the number of awards to state servants, largely reflecting the reductions in the size of the civil service and of the armed forces.

Ex-Ministers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, if he will list those who have resigned, retired or been dismissed from ministerial office in the past 10 years and the severance pay in (i) cash and (ii) current prices paid to each one.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to his answer of 7 December 1993, columns 142-43]: Severance payment shown as having been authorised with effect from 5 May 1992 for the Chairman of Committees, House of Lords and the Principal Deputy Chairman of Committees, House of Lords were not made since both the individuals concerned were disqualified, on grounds of age, under the terms of the Ministerial and Other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991

Child Support Agency

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will establish a hotline for hon. Members to contact the Child Support Agency on behalf of constituents on similar lines to the hotline for the disability living allowance.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Tony Wright, dated 14 December 1993:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for a hotline to be established to enable Members of Parliament to contact the Child Support Agency on behalf of their constituents.

I am pleased to be able to tell you that I have put arrangements in place, and have written to all Members individually on this and other matters relating to their correspondence with the Agency.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

Young People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds received severe hardship payments in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. John McAllion, dated 4 December 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away on annual leave at the moment, I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security. This was about the number of 16 and 17-year-olds who have received Severe Hardship Payments in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years.

Regrettably, the information required is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. This is because the statistics kept cover the number of applications, rather than the number of individuals who have claimed. Some customers may have made more than one application.

However, I have provided figures from the earliest date available, 1990, in the attached appendix relating to successful applications for Severe Hardship Payments. I should point out that the statistics relate to Benefits Agency Districts and are not routinely collected to show the number of claims specific to a town. The statistics given for Dundee relate to the Benefits Agency's Dundee East and West offices for the period January 1990 unitl March 1991. From the inception of the Benefits Agency in April 1991, the figures quoted are for the Tayside District Office, which also includes the Arbroath and Perth Branch Offices.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Successful Servere Hardship Claims

Scotland
1990	10,787
1991	10,983
1992	18,360
[1]1993	20,587

[1]The figures for 1993 show the position up until the end of October.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds had an automatic right to income support in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. John McAllion, dated 14 December 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away on annual leave at the moment, I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security. This was about the number of 16 and 17-year-olds who had an automatic right to Income Support in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years.

The information requested relating to Dundee is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, the table below gives data from the Annual Statistical Inquiry for the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland on Income Support. This includes those who are automatically entitled to Income Support and those paid under the special hardship rules. To obtain separate figures would incur disproportionate cost. The figures quoted show the number of customers at the end of May 1992, the last year for which figures are available, and have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

16 and 17-year-olds in receipt of Income Support in Scotland

	Numbers
May 1988	16,000
May 1989	2,000
May 1990	3,000
May 1991	2,000
May 1992	4,000

The figures for the Annual Statistical Inquiry are based on a 1 per cent. sample of Income Support cases at the time of inquiry.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit his Department dealt with last year; and what proportion of those claims were successful.

Mr. Scott: The number of claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit received during the 1992 calendar year was about 70,000. The result of these claims is not readily available, but we would normally expect about one quarter to be successful.

Contributions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consideration he is giving to employees being offered the option of better benefits in return for higher contributions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider combining an improved contributory system for those in employment with a participation income for (a) unpaid carers and (b) people active in voluntary work; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will consider abolishing the contributory principle and replace contributory benefits with non-means tested, non-contributory benefits paid out of taxation, to cover unemployment, sickness, maternity and retirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: I have no plans to do so.

Domestic Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people on low incomes and below pension age he estimates will be worse off as a result of his announcement in the Budget to retain the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel and power; and what plans he has to compensate them beyond the automatic increases of benefits in line with inflation.

Mr. Burt: The effect of the introduction of VAT on domestic fuel is uncertain since it is difficult to estimate trends in fuel prices and the effect of VAT on consumers expenditure. We have announced details of extra help for people receiving social security benefits. The help above normal uprating will be worth £1·5 billion over three years and more than 15 million people will gain from these measures.

Social Fund

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has recently considered the operation of the social fund review process.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that I will be making improvements to the social fund review process from April 1994. These changes will improve the speed and efficiency with which social fund review requests are handled within Benefits Agency district offices.

Improvements will be achieved through the appointment of specially trained social fund review officers. These expert officers will be responsible for ensuring that social fund review requests are considered as speedily and effectively as possible in district offices. In addition there will be some changes designed to streamline procedures.

Applicants will, of course, retain the right of an independent review by a social fund inspector.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Hague: The executive non-departmental public body sponsored by the Department of Social Security, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992," is the Occupational Pensions Board. The gross public spending figures at 1992-93 prices are in the table.

Gross public spending[1]

1990-91	2·451
1991-92	2·337
1992-93	2·695
1993-94	2·664
1994-95	2·538
1995-96	2·542

[1] Figures in millions, using GDP deflator.

Note: All figures exclude the costs of the Occupational Pensions Advisory Service (OPAS) which were included in the entry for the OPB in Public Bodies in 1992. OPAS is not an executive non-departmental public body.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Hague: The appointment of the president, regional chairman and other full-time chairmen of the independent tribunal service is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor. Otherwise, appointments of chairs and members of the boards of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by this Department are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inland Revenue

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of morale within the Inland Revenue; what redundancies have been made and for what reasons; what is the current backlog in dealing with tax cases and the corresponding figure for the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: There has been no general survey of morale recently. Two surveys by the industrial society carried out in 1992 found evidence of low morale in a number of parts of the Inland Revenue.

In 1992-93 there were 355 voluntary early retirements. In 1993-94 to the end of October there have been 191 voluntary early retirements, and four compulsory redundancies.

Key indicators of work state in the Inland Revenue are as follows:

Per cent.

	November 1993	1992-93	1991-92	1990-91
Post dealt with in 28 days	>99·0	>98·0	[1]—	[1]—
Employee cases

large/complex cases	95·3	96·9	90·0	80·2
other cases	98·8	99·6	99·0	98·0
Assessments on the self-employed made to meet the due date	[2]97·5	97·5	97·5	98·3

[1] New target in 1992-93.

[2] The programme ends in December. It is currently on course to meet the 97·5 per cent. target.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimates of (a) original, (b) gross, (c) disposable and (d) post-tax income, by decile, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The latest figures on the basis requested are for 1991 and were published in the May 1993 edition of Economic Trends. Estimates for 1993 will be published in due course when the 1993 Family Expenditure Survey is completed and processed.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated (a) mean and (b) median, (i) original, (ii) gross, (iii) disposable and (iv) post-tax income in 1993-94 in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The latest estimates of original, gross, disposable, and post-tax income, by decile group, are for 1991 and were published in the May 1993 edition of Economic Trends. Estimates for 1992 will be published in the January 1994 edition of Economic Trends.

The estimates are derived from the Family Expenditure Survey.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people he estimates will be made unemployed in the construction industry following his decision to reduce the annual allocation to the Housing Corporation by more than £300 million; how many planned building projects he estimates will be cancelled; and what plans he has to compensate the construction industry.

Mr. Portillo: The construction industry's main requirements are for continuing low interest rates and increasing economic confidence. My right hon. and learned Friend's Budget offers decisive action to reduce public sector borrowing. My right hon. and learned Friend has also announced several important new potential projects under the private finance initiative which can provide a boost for construction employment.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much he estimates the revenue from the uniform business rate will fall in real terms, following the announcement in November's Budget to maintain the 33 per cent. main rate and 25 per cent. lower rate of corporation tax.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no connection between the revenue from the uniform businesss rate and the rates set for corporation tax. Forecasts of cash revenues from the uniform business rate in 1993-94 and 1994-95 are set out in table 6.5 of the 1994-95 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

C. J. How

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on behalf of investors in C. J. How; and if he will make a statement on their prospects for compensation.

Mr. Nelson: A number of representations have been received on behalf of investors. C. J. How was never authorised to conduct investment business under the Financial Services Act and investors are not therefore eligible for compensation under the investors compensation scheme. I understand that in certain cases where holdings in unit trusts beneficially owned by investors were improperly redeemed by C. J. How, the unit trust firms have made ex gratia payments to individual clients of C. J. How.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much he estimates public sector pay will fall in real terms over the next three years; and how many public sector jobs he estimates will be lost.

Mr. Dorrell: In the climate of low inflation, it is necessary to change the expectation of pay increases which come automatically every year, regardless of performance. Pay rises have to be earned. This principle has increasingly been adopted in the private sector, and the public sector has to follow suit. We are confident that all areas of the public sector can make the efficiency savings necessary to fund pay settlements.

The Government do not directly control manpower numbers in substantial parts of the public sector and so cannot give projections. But as in the private sector, in controlling pay costs, the Government cannot rule out job losses. The way to safeguard jobs is to keep wages at affordable levels.

Income Support

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much he estimates the public sector borrowing requirement will fall in 1996-97 as a direct result of his decision to limit the availability of means-tested income support benefit for the unemployed to only six months; and how many people he estimates will be affected.

Mr. Portillo: No such decision has been taken.

Chief Secretary (Visits)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, how many visits abroad the Chief Secretary to the Treasury has made during 1993; and what was (a) the cost to public funds and (b) the purpose of each visit.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his answer, 7 December 1993, c. 133]: I also visited Madrid from 24 to 27 September, where I delivered a speech to the British Hispanic Foundation about growth, competitiveness, unemployment, and United Kingdom attitudes to the EC. The cost to the taxpayer of this visit was £480.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Roads

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of EC structural funds have been used in 1993-94 for capital investment programmes to upgrade roads in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The proportion of EC structural funds to be used in 1993-94 to upgrade roads in Northern Ireland is 1·4 per cent.

Residential Homes:

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients have been admitted to each residential home in the area administered by the Armagh and Dungannon unit of management since 1 April.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the following tables for the period 1 April to 30 September 1993, the latest date for which figures are available. The figures do not include those people who have made their own arrangements to enter homes and pay for their care.

Apprentices

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many apprentices entered training in colleges of further education in Northern Ireland in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. J. Crozier to Mr Roger Stott, dated 14 May:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many apprentices entered training in Colleges of Further Education in Northern Ireland in each of the years from 1990 to 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, which is responsible for the training and employment functions of Government in Northern Ireland, I have been asked to reply.

We have interpreted the word "apprentices" in your question to mean young people attracting skill level funding towards national vocational qualification (NVQ) level 3 in the youth training programme (YTP) who attend further education Colleges (FECs). The table shows the number of YTP trainees attracting skill level funding who were pursuing NVQ level 3 courses together with the total number of YTP trainees in further education colleges for the years 1990-91 to 1993-94 (to 31 October 1993).

I hope this is helpful.

Agricultural Wages Board

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library the responses to the consultation on the future of the agricultural wages board in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 3 December]: I have no plans to do so but copies will be available in the Library of the Department of Agriculture in Belfast.

Press and Publicity Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many press and publicity officers are currently employed in his Department; and how many were employed in (a) 1985 and (b) 1979.

Sir John Wheeler: Data on staff employed as press and publicity officers in 1985 and 1979 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The number of people currently employed in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Civil Service as press and publicity officers is 37.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations he envisages will govern the activities of neighbourhood watch patrols; and if he will make it his policy that no pressure should be put on neighbourhood watch groups to institute patrols.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to compensate members of the public for injury and wrongful arrest by members of his proposed extended neighbourhood watch scheme;

(2) what plans he has to ensure that convicted criminals are screened out of his proposed extended neighbourhood watch scheme;

(3) what plans he has to require members of his proposed extended neighbourhood watch scheme to wear numbered armbands or other means of personal identification.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In England and Wales there are over 115,000 neighbourhood watch schemes covering more than 5 million households. These are voluntary organisations run by local residents with the support of the police, and whose activities are geared to dealing with local crime prevention issues. Arrangements for membership is entirely a matter for individual schemes and internal arrangements including dress code and any screening of members is a local decision in consultation with the local police.

With the sanction of the local police, a number of schemes have chosen to undertake patrolling in their neighbourhood. In recognition of local initiatives and support of this growing trend, my right hon. and learned Friend announced at the neighbourhood watch conference on 4 December that a code of practice would be drawn up in consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers. There will be no requirement for neighbourhood watch schemes to patrol. The matters which could be covered in the code of practice will include the need for the agreement of the local police before schemes undertake patrols, information on what scheme members should do on seeing something suspicious, and the need to stay completely within the law.

Local Elections

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage of electors voting in local government elections for each county council, metropolitan borough council and London borough council since 1974.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is contained in a number of different publications which are available in the Library. The main ones are:

1974-79	Office of Population Censuses and Surveys "Electoral Statistics" series
1980-87	Publications by Parliamentary Research Services, Chichester, Sussex
1988 onwards	Publications by the Local Government Chronicle Elections Centre, University of Plymouth (formerly Plymouth Polytechnic) in the Local Elections Handbook series
1990	London Borough elections data published by the London Research Centre, 81 Black Prince Road, London SE1 7SZ ("London Borough Council Elections, 3 May 1990").

Chestnut Tree, Wanstead

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of policing the demonstration protesting against the felling of a 250-year-old chestnut tree at George Green, Wanstead, on 7 December.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) on 14 December at column 531.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, and in what manner, the warnings to leave were issued to protesters dwelling in the 250-year-old chestnut tree at George Green, Wanstead, before it was felled.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the warnings were not given by his officers but by the under-sheriff of Greater London.

Gunshot Wounds

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fatalities arose from gunshot wounds recorded in the years 1990, 1991 and 1992 in the United Kingdom; and what analysis has been made in his Department of how many such incidents involved assailants suffering from the ingestion of drugs.

Mr. Maclean: The available information, for England and Wales, which relates to offences currently recorded as homicide where the method of killing was recorded as shooting were as follows:

	Numbers
1990	58
1991	50
1992	52

No information is available centrally as to whether the assailants were suffering from the ingestion of drugs.

Figures for Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing, in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91, and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992."

Mr. Howard: Payments made, or planned to be made, from the Home Office Vote to the executive etc. bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1992"—adjusted to 1992-93 prices—are set out in the table:

Home Office funding to Executive, etc. bodies for 1990-91 to 1995-96 expressed in 1992-93 prices

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Howard: For the following executive non-departmental bodies the Home Secretary is responsible for appointing both the chairman and the board members. These are:

Alcohol Education and Research Council
Commission for Racial Equality
Community Development Foundation
Gaming Board
Horserace Totalisator Board
Fire Services Research and Training Trust

For the remaining executive non-departmental bodies, the position is as follows:

Office of the Data Protection Registrar

The registrar is a Crown appointment.

There are no members.

Police Complaints Authority

The chairman is a Crown appointment.

Board members are appointed by the Home Secretary.

Police Promotions Examinations Board

The chairman is appointed by the Home Secretary.

Members are nominated by the local authority and staff associations represented on the board.

Fire Services Examination Board

The chairman is appointed by the Home Secretary.

Four members are appointed by the Home Secretary.

The remaining members are appointed by the local authority and staff associations represented on the board.

Horserace Betting Levy Board

The chairman is appointed by the Home Secretary.

Two independent members are appointed by the Home Secretary.

The remainder of the board comprises representatives of the racing and betting industries: three British Horseracing Board appointees, the chairman of the Horserace Totalisator Board and the chairman of the Bookmakers Committee.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Howard: Figures for advertising expenditure since 1979 are as follows:

1979-80	2,904,671
1980-81	1,649,605
1981-82	1,834,476
1982-83	1,957,304
1983-84	2,760,681
1984-85	3,262,700
1985-86	3,306,391
1986-87	5,000,000
1987-88	4,700,000
1988-89	5,400,000
1989-90	5,500,000
1990-91	5,728,000
1991-92	7,275,940
1992-93	7,344,635

It is not possible to provide an accurate month by month breakdown of advertising expenditure for each of the last 12 months because campaigns are not booked monthly. Total expenditure for the financial year to date is £4,321,048.

Home Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 7 December, Official Report, columns 167-68, what was the voting record of each member state on all items agreed and adopted at the meeting of the European Community's Home Affairs Council held on 29 to 30 November; and if he will make it his practice automatically to record in future answers all such votes, including where no formal votes have been taken.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All the items agreed by the Interior and Justice Council fell under title VI of the Maastricht treaty and were adopted by unanimity. In future the Government will inform Parliament of all votes published by the Council; for title VI matters, publication of votes requires unanimous agreement. This was not sought by the Presidency on this occasion. If the Interior and Justice Council were to adopt Community legislation under the treaty of Rome, its votes would be published automatically unless a majority of the Council was opposed.

Embarkation Checks

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to alter the embarkation checks on passengers leaving the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: From 1 February passports will not normally be checked on departure from ferry ports and small airports for EC destinations. At the main airport terminals and on departure elsewhere for destinations outside the EC, the passports of non-EC nationals will continue to be examined; EC nationals will, as now, be expected to present their documents, but the closer examination of a 10 per cent. sample will cease.

These changes should freqe staff resources for work which contributes more directly to the effectiveness of the immigration control. The immigration officer's power to examine the passport of any departing passenger will however remain, and it will still be possible to mount ad hoc checks where, for example, there is reason to believe that someone of interest to the police in connection with serious crime is likely to leave the country by a particular route. Police powers under the Prevention of Terrorism legislation are unaffected.

Criminal Cases Review Authority

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made towards establishing the proposed criminal cases review authority recommended by the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

Mr. Howard: The Government have decided to establish a Criminal Cases Review Authority to review alleged miscarriages of justice. We have put in hand the detailed preparatory work which will be necessary before any new arrangements can be put in place. We shall be issuing a consultation paper early next year which will set out the issues, put forward our proposals for dealing with them and identify any practical problems which still need to be settled. I am sure that the paper will be of interest to many people and I look forward to receiving their views on what it has to say.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the White Paper setting out more detailed proposals for changing the criminal injuries compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have today published the White Paper. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

The Secretary of State for Scotland and I are jointly responsible for the criminal injuries compensation scheme and for the new arrangements.

The main features of those arrangements are that compensation will no longer be assessed on a basis comparable to common law damages. Instead, payment will be made from a tariff (or scale) of awards for injuries of comparable severity. All eligible applicants with a similar injury will be treated in the same way. This will make the new scheme more straightforward and simpler to administer. It should also be easier for claimants to understand, and they should now have a much better idea when they apply what award they might expect to receive.

The tariff levels have been set by reference to awards made in the recent past by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. The lower limit will remain unchanged at £1,000, and there will be 25 tariff levels ranging from that threshold to £¼ million for the most serious category of injury. The basic rules of eligibility will remain broadly the same as under the present scheme.

The tariff scheme will be run by a non-departmental public body, the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA). There will also be a new independent appeals panel to which those dissatisfied with the authority's decision will be able to appeal.

Our compensation scheme is one of the most generous schemes in the world, and will remain so when the tariff scheme is introduced. We believe the new tariff scheme should enable us to provide a better service to the blameless victims of violent crime.

Immigration

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will review the workings of the immigration section of his Department to ensure that no racial prejudice is demonstrated against Thai citizens seeking to enter the United Kingdom as legal spouses of a British citizens;

(2) if he will review the workings of his entry visa system to ensure that United Kingdom citizens who have married a spouse in Thailand are allowed to bring that spouse back to reside in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A Thai citizen who wishes to enter the United Kingdom as the spouse of a British citizen must meet the requirements of the immigration rules in the same way as any other foreign national seeking entry on this basis. I see no need for reviews of the kind that the hon. Member has in mind, but if he has a particular case in mind which has caused concern I shall be glad to enquire into it. Under the immigration rules, officials are required to carry out their duties without regard to race, colour or religion.

Stolen Vehicles

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures he has on the use of stolen motor vehicles in the course of other criminal offences in the latest available year.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Commissioner on the cost of policing so far incurred in relation to demonstrations against the M11 link road in Wanstead.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) on 14 December at col. 531 concerning the cost of policing the demonstration on 7 December. Information on the total cost of police operations in connection with the M11 link road is not available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Commissioner as to the reasons for the procedures adopted by police officers in relation to demonstrations against the M11 link road in Wanstead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of the Police of the Metropolis that his officers were assisting the under sheriff of Greater London to execute an order of the High Court for possession of the land.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the recommendations of the firearms consultative committee that have been implemented nationally, from each of its annual reports.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Implementation of a considerable number of the Firearms Consultative Committee's (FCC) recommendations will require primary legislation to amend the Firearms Acts. I am unable to say when parliamentary time might be available for legislation on firearms matters. Other recommendations which have already been implemented by means of subordinate legislation or through administrative action are listed. Work is in hand towards the implementation of a number of other recommendations of the committee.

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT

Approved Rifle and Pistol Clubs

The changes to the revised criteria for club approval which the committee recommended were incorporated in the final list of revised approval criteria and have been in place since January 1990.

Countersignatures

I understand from the committee's recommendations that no class of person should be automatically excluded from being accepted as a countersignatory to a firearm or shot gun certificate application; that flexibility should be applied in interpretation of the definition of a countersignatory; and that any inconsistency should be reported to chief officers of police have been promulgated to forces by the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Visitor's Permit Scheme

I understand that police forces are following the committee's recommendations that British visitor's permits should in general be issued for the full twelve months allowed in law and that applications should be supplied in English.

SECOND ANNUAL REPORT

European Commission Proposal for a Council Directive on the Acquisition and Possession of Weapons

The regulations which transposed the directive's provisions into our domestic legislation (Firearms Acts (Amendment) Regulations 1992—SI 1992 No. 2823) retained the British visitor's permit scheme and also made the issue of European firearms passes a police responsibility.

Control of Explosives Regulations

A number of the committee's recommendations were given effect in the final version of the regulations (SI 1991 No. 1531) which it had seen in draft. To minimise bureaucracy the regulations provided for explosives certificates to be issued coterminously with an existing firearm or shot gun certificate. Limits on the quantitites of explosives which can be kept for private use were also increased.

THIRD ANNUAL REPORT

Definition of antique weapons and Collecting of firearms

Revised guidance to police on which weapons should be considered as antiques was issued in November 1992.

Provision was made in the Firearms Acts (Amendment) Regulations 1992 allowing the continued private possession by collectors of certain items which are prohibited from general public possession by virtue of the EC Weapons Directive.

Carrier of Prohibited Weapons

The Home Office issued an addendum to its guidance to carriers of prohibited weapons covering the carriage of weapons to and from the gun barrel proof houses.

Leaflet on the Security of Firearms and Shot Guns

The Home Office published a leaflet on firearm and shot gun security in October 1992.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will advise police forces to stop the practice of stamping envelopes containing correspondence to firearms and shotgun holders information to the effect that if the envelope is found it should be returned to the firearms unit of the force concerned.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The administration of the firearms licensing system is the responsibility of individual chief officers of police. We have no plans to issue guidance to the police on this subject but the matter has been brought to the attention of the Association of Chief Police Officers for any action which it considers necessary.

Tracker Security Devices

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which police forces have equipment that enables them to recover stolen vehicles that are fitted with Tracker security devices;

(2) what his Department is doing to encourage the fitting of Tracker devices to help locate stolen vehicles;

(3) what assessment he has made of the use of Tracker devices in the recovery of stolen cars (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All mainland United Kingdom police forces are equipped to pick up signals from Tracker devices.

While concealed tracking devices can provide a valuable weapon in the fight against vehicle crime, it is not appropriate for the Home Office to endorse or promote individual tracking systems.

The Home Office has made no assessment of the operational value of tracking devices. It has, however, carried out a technical assessment of the available equipment on behalf of the police.

Police Establishment

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the (a) authorised establishment, (b) actual strength and (c) number of vacancies for the police services establishment of the Metropolitan police in each month of 1993;

(2) what was the authorised establishment of police service officers in England and Wales, in each constabulary including the Metropolitan police, on 1 January;

(3) if he will list the constabularies in England and Wales which are under strength; and if he will set out in each case the numbers under strength and the percentage under strength in each establishment (a) at 1 January 1993 and (b) for the latest month available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Police Authorities (Budget)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total budget for the police authorities in England and Wales for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr Charles Wardle: The latest estimates by police authorities indicate total expenditure as £5,797 million in 1992-93 and £6,114 million in 1993-94. No figure for 1994-95 is yet available.

Election Leaflets

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 627, if he will examine the feasibility of bringing forward amendments to the Representation of the People Acts to outlaw the production of fraudulent election leaflets purporting to come from a rival political party.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no immediate plans to do so. The issue may arise in discussions with the political parties next year and I shall consider any representations which might then be made on this issue.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received calling for a review of the Homicide Act 1957 and the criminal justice system with regard to reforming the definition of provocation to include prolonged domestic violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have received many letters on this subject from parliamentary colleagues and from members of the public.

The Government's position is set out in our response to the recent Report of the Home Affairs Select Committee on Domestic Violence (Cm 2269), a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The Government do not accept that the case has been made for a change in the law. In our view, the present law on provocation reflects a proper balance between a reluctance on the one hand to exonerate pre-meditated revenge killing and a desire on the other to leave a judgment on the facts of the individual case to the jury. Nevertheless, the law in this area is kept under careful review.

Deportation

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women who were initially granted entry permits in order to join their husbands have been deported from Britain in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her on 1 December at column 627.

Director General of Prison Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current salary paid to Mr. Derek Lewis, the director general of the prison service.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Lewis's salary is £125,000 a year. He is also eligible for a performance bonus of up to 35 per cent. of basic salary.

Prisoner Escape

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the circumstances which allowed the escape of a high-security prisoner, from his escort in or in the vicinity of the Bell public house, Pokesdown, Bournemouth on Friday 3 December.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. David Atkinson, dated 15 December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the circumstances which allowed the escape of a high security prisoner, from his escort in the vicinity of the Bell public house, Pokesdown, Bournemouth on Friday 3 December.

Richard James Tyres was granted temporary release from HMP Albany under Rule 6 of the Prison Rules. This provides for prisoners to be released outside the custody or control of a prison officer for any special purpose which will assist them in their transition from prison life to freedom.

Mr. Tyres was not a high security prisoner; he had been recategorised to category C (low risk) in October 1993 as a result of his behaviour and progress in prison and in consequence was considered a suitable risk for temporary release. He was accompanied, but not escorted, by his personal case officer who had been working closely with Mr. Tyres and the Probation Service to develop realistic resettlement plans for his eventual release.

The purpose of this release was to attend an interview in Bournemouth with the community drug team. Following the Community Care Act it is now necessary to have a needs assessment completed before the local authority will agree to recommend the funding of a place in a residential drug unit on release.

Following the interview there was an interval before the afternoon ferry booking. Both the officer and inmate went into a pub where the officer drank orange juice and the prisoner brown ale. No specific instructions had been given about this. Had the prisoner been released, as normal, without an officer accompanying him, it would have been a matter over which we would have had no control.

On leaving the public house Mr. Tyres ran off. The officer immediately alerted the police who had been informed, in advance, of Mr. Tyres presence in the area.

Although Mr. Tyres had been sentenced to five years imprisonment in May 1992, he was eligible for release on licence in August 1993, taking into account time spent on remand. His first application was not successful and he was due to be reviewed again in May 1994. If he were to have any realistic chance of success in this review it would be essential for him to demonstrate satisfactory release plans were in place.

Mr. Tyres was recaptured by the police on 9 December. The governor is conducting a full inquiry into the incident to establish whether there were any weaknesses in the procedures which led to the decision to release Mr. Tyres.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. Howard: In 1990-91, the Home Secretary's three cars cost £75,700, including £2,700 for maintenance. The current costs given in my reply to the hon. Member's earlier question on 3 December at column 783 included a provision of £25,000 for maintenance which is unlikey to be fully taken up.

Other Home Office Ministers used four cars supplied by the Government car service. In addition, cars were supplied for the transportation of ministerial despatch boxes. The total cost of these cars in 1990-91 was £191,000. The increased cost since then is attributed to price increases (18 per cent.), an increase in VAT (2·5 per cent.) and an increase in usage of the service (8·5 per cent.).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

17. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of talks on future of democracy in Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: We have sought agreement with China on the electoral arrangements for 1994 and 1995 in Hong Kong. But after seventeen Rounds of talks, the pressures of the legislative timetable have obliged the Governor to introduce draft legislation today into the Legislative Council covering the more urgent issues. Our aim was to gain a little more time to continue talks with China on the remaining electoral issues. We remain ready for further talks. Co-operation between Britain and China is the best way of securing a smooth transition for Hong Kong in 1997.

27. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Governor of Hong Kong's proposals to advance democracy in the Crown Colony.

28. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in the talks between the United Kingdom and China with regard to the future of Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have sought agreement with China on the electoral arrangements for 1994 and 1995 in Hong Kong. But after seventeen Rounds of talks, the pressures of the legislative timetable have obliged the Governor to introduce draft legislation today into the Legislative Council covering the more urgent issues. Our aim was to gain a little more time to continue talks with China on the remaining electoral issues. We remain ready for further talks. Co-operaton between Britain and China is the best way of securing a smooth transition for Hong Kong in 1997.

Angola

18. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sanctions he will now propose in the UN Security Council against UNITA of Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It would not be sensible to propose additional sanctions against UNITA at a time when the organisation is holding direct talks with the Government.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest situation in Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennnox-Boyd: Fighting in Angola has diminished since UNITA announced a unilateral ceasefire on 20 September, but sporadic fighting continues in some parts of the country. The United Nations Secretary General's special representative, Mr. Beye, has been chairing talks in Lusaka between the Government of Angola and UNITA. The Secretary General is due to report on the outcome to the Security Council on 15 December. We understand that progress has been made in the negotiations, but there are still many issues to be resolved.

32. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current Government policy towards Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have been active in the Security Council, bilaterally with the Angolan Government and UNITA.

Libya

20. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in negotations with Libya over the trial of the two Libyan nationals suspected of involvement in the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Libyan Government are aware of the demands of the United Nations Security Council, and in particular that it must ensure the appearance of those charged with the Lockerbie bombing for trial in the appropriate United Kingdom or United States court and satisfy the French judicial authorities over the bombing of flight UTA 772.

European Community Enlargement

21. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards the enlargement of the European Community.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Good progress has been made during the Belgian Presidency in the negotiations with the four EFTA applicants for Community membership, Norway, Sweden, Austria and Finland. But some difficult issues remain to be settled, notably agriculture and regional policy. Decisive progress is needed in the next few months if the target of entry of these four applicants into the Community by 1 January 1995 is to be met.

Far East (Exports)

22. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts his Department is making to promote British exports to the far east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: All FCO posts in the far east have export promotion as a top priority. They seek out export opportunities, advise British companies on the business to be won in their markets, lobby on their behalf for major contracts and against discrimination, organise visits by ministers and trade missions with the specific object of winning business amongst other tasks. I am happy to say that our exports to China are 90 per cent. up this year, to the Philipines 59 per cent., to Thailand 43 per cent., to South Korea 25 per cent., to Malaysia 51 per cent., to Hong Kong 33 per cent., to Singapore 25 per cent. and to Taiwan 20 per cent.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

23. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress on talks to bring the GATT round to a successful conclusion.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave earlier to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Milligan).

Election Observers

24. Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the likely demand for parliamentary support in observing elections in newly emerging democracies in 1994.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We hope that there will be several elections in emerging democracies in 1994 to which missions of international observers will be invited. The most notable is the election in South Africa, but there will be elections in Ukraine, Moldova and Kazakhstan, and possibly in Mozambique, Malawi, Belarus and the Occupied Territories. The numbers of observers required will depend on how each observer mission is organised. The United Kingdom hopes to send observers as appropriate either bilaterally or through missions organised by the United Nations, Commonwealth or European Union.

Bosnia

25. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take, through the United Nations, to secure the reopening of Tusla airport in central Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) is urgently considering options for re-opening Tuzla airport. Much depends upon the cooperation of the warring parties to ensure the security of relief flights. Progress has been made in talks between UNPROFOR and the local Bosnian authorities, but agreement has yet to be reached with the Bosnian Serb army, whose artillery is within range of the airport.

35. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with his European Community counterparts on efforts to find a peaceful solution to the conflict in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At their meeting with the parties in Geneva on 29 November, European Union Foreign Ministers stressed the importance of a peace settlement if a humanitarian disaster is to be avoided. The subsequent peace talks made some progress in clarifying positions. The European Council on 10-11 December agreed to urge the parties to continue negotiating, and to maintain pressure on the Serbs to make further territorial concessions on the scale demanded by the Bosnian Government.

Kashmir

26. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had recently with the Indian Government regarding human rights violations in Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have repeatedly impressed on the Indian Government our concerns about human rights abuses in Kashmir.

Zimbabwe

29. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to visit Zimbabwe to discuss bilateral relations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to visit Zimbabwe.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to President Mugabe about the continued imprisonment in Zimbabwe of Michael Smith, Kevin Woods, Barry Bawden, Philip Conjwayo and Charles Beahan and seek a reprieve of their death sentences on humanitarian grounds.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 10 December, the Zimbabwe Supreme Court commuted the death sentences on Woods, Conjwayo and Smith—a British citizen—to life imprisonment. They had been found guilty of murder. We have no plans to make representations on their behalf, or on behalf of Bawden and Beahan—also a British citizen—who were imprisoned for attempting to rescue the others.

Councils of Ministers

30. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has made, following the decisions of the European Councils in Edinburgh 1992 and Brussels 1993, to increase the transparency and accountability of decision-making, including the recording of votes of each member state, at meetings of European Community Councils of Ministers at which his Department is represented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Foreign Affairs Council on 6 December agreed that votes on legislative decisions would be published automatically unless a majority of the Council opposed this. This is a more automatic procedure than that agreed on 4 October, and fully consistent with the conclusions of the Edinburgh European Council last December. Voting details are now published by the Council secretariat after Council meetings. We shall ensure that this information is provided to Parliament.

Transcaucasus States

31. Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to meet leaders of the Transcaucasus states of the former Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement about developments in that region.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, has no current plans to meet leaders of the Transcaucasus although I hope there will be opportunities for meetings in the near future.

We attach great importance to encouraging peace and stability in the Transcaucasus and fully support the efforts currently being made to resolve disputes by negotiation. We welcome the start of talks between the Abkhaz and the Georgians under United Nations auspices. We also support the CSCE's continuing efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, as well as its contribution to resolution of the political problems in South Ossetia.

South Africa

33. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help Her Majesty's Government intend to give in the coming year to South Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We will continue to give South Africa as much moral and practical support as we can. This includes a growing aid programme, which last year totalled over £11·5 million, with a similar sum as our share of EC aid.

34. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other representatives of the Security Council of the United Nations concerning the upcoming general election in South Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in close contact with Security Council partners, the Secretary-General, the Secretariat and the United Nations observer mission already in South Africa (UNOMSA)—as we are with our European Union and Commonwealth partners—about international assistance in support of the election process in South Africa.

India

36. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indian Government regarding the incidence of abortion of female foetuses and infanticide of new-born females.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: India acceded to the convention on the rights of the child in December 1992 and is bound by its provisions. The Indian Government also attended the world conference on human rights this year, when the conference called upon states to repeal laws and remove practices which discriminate against and cause harm to the girl child. We are encouraging all states, including India, to implement these measures.

Northern Ireland

37. Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the involvement of the United States Administration in the peace process in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: President Clinton has several times expressed his firm support for the efforts of the British and Irish Governments to promote talks on the future of Northern Ireland. I much welcome this.

Yugoslavia

38. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's latest policy towards the conflict in former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to support the co-chairmen of the International Conference on the former Yugoslavia in their efforts to secure peaceful settlements in Bosnia and Croatia. The European Union Foreign Ministers' meeting with the parties on 29 November has helped to restart negotiations on Bosnia. The European Union is meanwhile committed through the winter to continue and enhance its efforts to provide humanitarian aid. The United Kingdom remains one of the largest donors, having given over £152 million.

Russia

39. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's view on the progress of reform in Russia and the impact on United Kingdom policy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The largest democratic consultation in the history of Russia took place on 12 December, involving multi-party elections and a referendum on a new constitution. It demonstrates how far democratic reform has progressed in post-Soviet Russia. We welcome the adoption by the Russian people of a constitution which provides for democracy and human rights. This process will further strengthen our bilateral relations.

Serbia

40. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he recently had about sanctions in Serbia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sanctions were discussed by European Union Foreign Ministers during their meeting with the parties in Geneva on 29 November, and by European Union Heads of Government at the European Council on 10–11 December.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take to assist moves towards democracy in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We will continue, with our European partners, to encourage democracy and democratic values in sub-Saharan Africa in political contacts, through our aid programme and, where possible, in providing support for elections.

Cuba

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the reason for Her Majesty's Government's abstention on the vote at the United Nations calling for the lifting by the United States of America of its financial and trade blockade on Cuba.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With the majority of European Union member states, we abstained because we believe the United States embargo against Cuba is primarily a bilateral matter for those two governments.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when was the last time that a British Foreign Office Minister visited Sudan; and when he plans to visit Khartoum to stimulate a peace initiative.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The then Foreign Secretary visited Sudan in September 1988. We continue to look closely at all possible ways of helping bring about an end to the civil war in Sudan, and have welcomed the peace initiative of the Kenyan, Ugandan, Ethiopian and Eritrean Presidents. There are no firm plans for a visit to Sudan by a Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister at present, but we do not rule out this option.

Korean Peninsula

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest decision of the Security Council of the United Nations concerning the situation on the Korean peninsula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 11 May the United Nations Security Council passed a resolution, SCR 825, calling on North Korea to reconsider its stated intention to withdraw from the Nuclear non-proliferation treaty and to honour all its obligations under that treaty, including complying with its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. The Council also decided to remain seized of the matter and to consider further action as necessary.

United Nations Members

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the member states of the United Nations with populations of fewer than 2·8 million, with their current population and gross national product per head in each case for the latest available year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits have been made by Foreign Office staff to Somalia in the current year; where they went; and what were the lessons from their visits.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Foreign Office staff from London, the British embassy in Addis Ababa and the British High Commission in Nairobi have made a total of 15 visits to Somalia this year. They visited Mogadishu, Kismayo, Baidoa, Hargeisa, Belet Huen, Berbera and Bossasso. The visits were made in order to assess the humanitarian and political situation on the ground.

Seeds (Intellectual Property Rights)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of the Government, within European Union discussions about the general agreement on tariffs and trade, concerning the potential impact on farmers in Commonwealth countries of proposals made within the GATT negotiations for the enforcement of intellectual property rights over varieties of seeds.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No specific representations have been necessary. The trade-related intellectual property agreement (TRIPs) in the GATT Uruguay round is a good one. It aims to establish minimum property rights for new products, including new varieties of plants. It is compatible with, and complementary to, the international convention for the protection of new varieties of plants (UPOV convention).

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, by location, the annual heating fuel bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

WALES

Sheep Quota Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions officers from the agricultural section of his Department have met Mr. or Mrs. G. E. Lockett of Ty Loch, Betws Garnon, Caernarfon, to discuss the difficulties facing them because of the rules of the new sheep quota scheme; and if he will find a method to alleviate their difficulties.

Mr. Redwood: One meeting and six telephone calls have taken place. Mr. and Mrs. Lockett should by now have received a letter from the divisional office explaining that, as first-time claimants in 1992, they are eligible to apply for quota from "the pool".

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what date the national reserve will be made available and distributed to sheep farmers who have been so far denied a quota under the new scheme.

Mr. Redwood: The statutory instrument giving details of the national reserve for sheep quota came into force on 7 December. The deadline for receipt of applications for categories 1 and 2 is 7 January 1994. Quota allocations will then be made as soon as possible. Applications to the remaining categories of the 1993 sheep quota national reserve will be invited after we have dealt with categories 1 and 2.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 179, what is the exact number of representations he has received on the question of the operation of the siphon in the context of sheep quota where it applies to changes in existing partnerships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received representations from 10 Members of Parliament and both farming unions in Wales. My officials have also received inquiries from a number of individuals and other interested organisations.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now take immediate and urgent steps to reverse the cuts in hill livestock compensatory allowance payments and restore these to their original value.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the reduction in farm incomes in Wales resulting from the recent reductions in hill livestock compensatory allowance payments; and what is his estimate of the maximum likely loss of income to any individual farming unit.

Mr. Redwood: Based on expected eligible livestock numbers it is estimated that total payments of hill livestock compensatory allowances to Welsh producers under the 1994 scheme will be £5·5 million lower than under the 1993 scheme. Figures are not available for the maximum reduction in payment to any individual farming unit. The reduced 1994 payments should be seen in the context of rising overall farm incomes in the less-favoured areas and an overall increase in subsidy resulting from changes in other agricultural support.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the average waiting time between application and completion of work involving mandatory home improvement grants for the whole of Wales, and for each district council in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

School Inspections

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the financing of school inspections; what amount will be lost to each education authority's inspection and advisory services; and whether each education authority will receive a rebate if the actual cost of inspections is less than the estimate made at the start of the financial year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for school inspections rests with the office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales. Resources have been transferred from local to central Government for this purpose at the all-Wales level and in consultation with the Assembly of Welsh Counties. They amount to £0·933 million, £3·283 million and £4·651 in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 respectively. The overall transfer sum remains appropriate and there is no question of it being revisited.

Arable Aid and Payments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by how much payments to Welsh arable farmers will be increased under the arable aid payments scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am consulting the industry about the regionalisation proposals I announced on 29 October. Payment levels will depend on the terms of the final plan for the 1993-94 planting year which I shall announce as soon as possible after 17 December, which is the closing date for comments on my proposals.

Home Renovation Grants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the number of applications received by each district council in Wales for home renovation grants, together with the percentage of these applications as a proportion of the total number of houses in each district, and the total number of such applications received for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Student Grants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the proposed 10 per cent. reduction in student grants.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received two letters on this subject.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the timing of the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering for unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have received several representations and hope to make an announcement soon about the timetable for extending competitive tendering in Wales.

District Council Elections

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that no elections will be held during 1994 in those Welsh district councils which retain elections by thirds.

Mr. Redwood: No. The elections due in May 1994 will go ahead.

Badgers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether, following publication of the new five-year programme, badger culling will now cease in Wales;

(2) if there will be a suspension of badger culling following the announcement of the revised procedure.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced the Government's revised approach regarding badgers and tuberculosis on 8 December. This gave details of the action programme which it has been decided to set in place, which includes a trial of a new badger control strategy to run for at least five years based on the application of the test for tuberculosis in the live badger in areas of the south-west of England. In areas outside those proposed for the trial the existing arrangements will continue, which will mean that no action will be taken against badgers on any farm in those areas where there has been a tuberculosis breakdown unless it has been specifically sanctioned by a sub-committee of the consultative panel on badgers and bovine tuberculosis.

Local Authorities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will issue guidelines for the listing of the assets of local authorities prior to their transfer to the new unitary councils and the residual authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Draft guidance was issued to local authorities on 31 August 1993.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date Welsh local authorities were advised of the proposed draft electoral wards which will be introduced for the unitary planning authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is my intention to consult Welsh local authorities on proposed electoral wards soon, taking account of my right hon. Friend's recent announcement that there should be about 1,250 councillors in the proposed unitary authorities.

Local Government (Powys Model)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he received regarding the proposed Powys model structure of local government; if he will list those organisations making such representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have received representations from about 40 organisations and individuals, including the following:

Council of Welsh Districts
Assembly of Welsh Counties
Campaign for Mongomeryshire
Montgomeryshire Conservative Association
Powys County Council
Brecknock Borough Council
Clwyd County Council
Gwynedd County Council
Montgomeryshire District Council
Merthyr Tydfil Borough Council
Aberconwy Borough Council
Ynys Mon Borough Council
Blaenau Gwent Borough Council
Cardiff City Council
Swansea City Council
Meirionnydd Campaign Committee
Carreghofa Community Council
Arfon Borough Council

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for appointing (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Welsh Office rests with the Secretary of State for Wales, with the exception of the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments whose appointments are made under royal warrant. My ministerial colleagues and senior officials assist in interviewing and selecting suitable candidates.

Council Tax

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council tax appeals have been received in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As at 30 November 53,623 proposals for the alteration of the valuation list had been received by the Valuation Office Agency. This represents 4·4 per cent. of all dwellings in the valuation lists. Of these 10,600 had already been settled. The Welsh Office is considering the arrangements for dealing with outstanding appeals with the agency and representatives of the valuation tribunal service.

Appointments (Women)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the appointments made by him are held by women.

Sir Wyn Roberts: An updated list of appointments at 1 December 1993 has been placed in the Library of the House. Women hold 200—25 per cent.—appointments out of a total of 784; there are 14 vacancies.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library tables showing in respect of each local education authority the number of school pupils of primary and secondary age who are resident within the local education authority area but who are educated in maintained schools outside the local education authority area, and the numbers of pupils educated in maintained schools within the local education authority area who are resident outside the area with the resident and receivintg local education authority area specified in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested will be placed in the Library, together with an explanatory guide. The data are provisional and based on the position at January 1993.

Head Teachers

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the current average salaries for primary school head teachers, secondary school head teachers, primary school teachers and secondary school teachers.

Mr. Robin Squire: The new earnings survey recorded the average salary of all primary school teachers, including head teachers, in Great Britain at 1 April 1993 as £19,760 and of all secondary school teachers, including head teachers, as £21,663. The average salary of a primary school head teacher is estimated as £26,316 and a secondary school head teacher as £35,891.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing, in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Boswell: Details of the Department's funding for these bodies, in 1992-93 prices, are shown in the table. Planning allocations for 1995-96 will be announced as soon as possible.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards of governors of higher education corporations.

Mr. Boswell: The Secretary of State makes the initial appointments of members of boards of governors of higher education corporations. Subsequent appointments are for the boards themselves to determine. In certain circumstances the appointment of independent members may be made by the existing independent members of the board. Chairs of boards, in relation to either initial or subsequent appointments, are appointed by the boards of governors from among their members.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards of governors for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Chairmen of self-governing (grant-maintained) schools are elected by the governing body as a whole at the first meeting of every school year. Every governing body must include parent governors, teacher governors, the head teacher and either first governors (in the case of former county schools) or foundation governors (in the case of former voluntary schools).

Parent and teacher governors are elected respectively by parents of registered pupils at, and teachers employed by, the school. First governors are appointed by the governing body, while foundation governors continue to be appointed by those so entitled when the school had voluntary status.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Boswell: The information required is as follows:

Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges

Chairman and members appointed by the Secretary of State for Education.

Centre for Information on Language Teaching

Chairman and 10 members appointed by the Secretary of State for Education.

One member appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Education Assets Board

(Appointment to the post of chief executive will in future be made by the board subject to the approval of the Secretary of State for Education.)

Further Education Funding Council for England

Further Education Unit Board of Management

Chairman and members appointed by the Secretary of State for Education after consultation with the Secretary of State for Wales.

National Council for Educational Technology

Twelve appointments made by the Secretary of State for Education.

One appointment made by the Secretary of State for Wales.

One appointment made by the Secretary of State for Scotland.

One appointment made by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland

National Youth Agency Management Committee

Chairman and members appointed by the Secretary of State for Education.

Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority

Chairman and members appointed by the Secretary of State for Education.

Teaching as a Career Unit Board

Director and members appointed by the Secretary of State for Education.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards of governors of further education corporations.

Mr. Boswell: The members of each further education corporation are responsible for appointing a chairman from among their number. Initial appointments were made by virtue of the instruments of government in the case of FE corporations to conduct former FE colleges and by the Secretary of State in the case of corporations to conduct former sixth form colleges. New or additional members are normally appointed by the corporation.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards of governors of city technology colleges.

Mr. Robin Squire: City technology colleges are charitable companies and under the model scheme of government the members of the companies are responsible for appointing the chairs and members of the boards of governors.

Student Loans

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education from which European Community countries students enrolled in United Kingdom universities qualify for the students loans schemes.

Mr. Boswell: European Community students may be eligible for a student loan if they have been ordinarily resident in the British islands for three years before the start of their course; or are refugees; or have established migrant worker status.

Student Grants

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received indicating that students falsely claim elements of grant for living away from home; what estimates he has of the amounts of money involved; and if he will make a statement on the measures he has in place to check this fraud.

Mr. Boswell: Mandatory awards are paid by local education authorities. The responsibility for ensuring that adequate controls and systems are in place, and operate satisfactorily, rests with them. Authorities receive grant from my right hon. Friend on their lawful expenditure on mandatory awards, and their annual certificates of expenditure must be endorsed by independent auditors. My right hon. Friend has received no representations of the kind to which my hon. Friend refers.

Schools Funding

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review the system of funding for all primary and secondary schools to take account of their age and structural condition.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Stratford School

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how Mr. Mark Prisk became a governor of Stratford school; who nominated him; what are his local qualifications; when he was made a governor; and when he became chairman of the governors.

Mr. Robin Squire: All questions concerning the appointment of individual governors at Stratford school are a matter for the governing body.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Boswell: The information is set out in the table:

[1] Data covers main gas and oil heating only except for Lading House which is electrically heated.

[2] Electricity consumption by air-conditioning systems (where installed) cannot be separated from consumption on other plant, equipment and lighting and is therefore not included.

Teachers (Citizenship)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by local education authority the number of teachers employed who are not EU citizens; and if he will set out their nationality, qualifications and type of post occupied.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not centrally available.

Theological Colleges

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what public funding is made available for theological colleges in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Fees are payable under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations for eligible students holding mandatory awards attending designated courses at theological colleges. Fees are paid at varying rates for students at colleges which are part of publicly funded universities. Designated courses at other theological colleges attract fees of £715 per student.

Final Examinations (Deferment)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what means of publicly funded support are available to students who defer final examinations due to illness or personal circumstances.

Mr. Boswell: The financial support available to students who defer final examinations will depend on the arrangements made by individual institutions for students to take their examinations.

When the student holds a mandatory award and is absent from the course for a short period the local authority which bestowed the award has power to continue to make such payments of the award as they consider appropriate. If the student has to repeat some or all of the final year of the course he may receive payments of the award, at the discretion of the LEA, and a student loan, depending on the amount of time he is in attendance at the institution; and he can apply for help from the access funds. After 28 weeks of certified sickness a student may claim income support and housing benefit.

RAF Chivenor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what additional support he intends to allocate to Devon county council and schools in Braunton to cope with the funding implications of the Government's announcement that it proposes to run RAF Chivenor down to a care maintenance regime.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government set the framework for the distribution of resources through the standard spending assessment (SSA) system in a way which takes account of the number of pupils for whom local authorities are financially responsible. Allowing for local authority changes of function, the underlying increase in Devon's provisional education SSA for 1994-95 is 3·3 per cent.—a higher than average increase. Devon county council is responsible for determining its spending priorities and for allocating resources to schools through its scheme of local management. It will be free to take account of changes at RAF Chivenor.

Expenditure

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each local authority for the last five years (a) the education component per pupil of the standard spending assessment, (b) net institutional expenditure per pupil and (c) the relationship of one figure to the other expressed as a percentage.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not available in the form requested. I will write to the hon. Member.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Price Marking Order

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current status of the Price Marking (Bargain Offers) Order.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Price Marking (Bargain Offers) Orders 1979 was revoked in 1989. Its provisions were replaced by the provisions of part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987, which make it an offence to give a misleading price indication by any means, and the code of practice for traders on price indications issued under section 25 of that Act.

Milk Marketing Board

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will immediately refer for examination by the Office of Fair Trading the methods employed by the Milk Marketing Board in seeking to establish Milk Marque as its private monopolistic successor.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Office of Fair Trading has been consulted on the reorganisation scheme which the Milk Marketing Board has submitted to my right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales. My right hon. Friends have recently completed public consultation on the scheme. They will have regard to whether the scheme takes account of the interests of consumers and producers of milk and to whether the structure of the new arrangements contemplated by the scheme is such as to allow for the development of competition in milk marketing in deciding whether to approve it.

The wholesale supply of milk is at present excluded from the monopoly reference powers of the Director General of Fair Trading under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973, but I propose to make an order withdrawing this exclusion from the date reorganisation takes place. The Director General of Fair Trading will then have a responsibility to monitor developments in the milk market and will be able to make a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission if he deems it appropriate.

EC Programmes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will discuss with the European Commission what measures should be introduced to replace the integrated operations and RECHAR programmes after 31 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 9 December, Official Report, column 348.

Vehicle Tracker Devices

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) United Kingdom manufacturers and (b) United Kingdom suppliers of vehicle tracker devices are known to his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: We know of no United Kingdom manufacturers and only one supplier of this imported device.

Thorp

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Her Majesty's Government first provided Euratom with a full set of design details of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant to assist in the preparations of safeguards and nuclear materials security arrangements.

Mr. Eggar: Such information is supplied to Euratom by the plant operator, BNFL, in confidence. However, a general description of the interaction of BNFL with Euratom on this subject is given in the paper "THORP: The route to a safeguardable plant", presented in May 1993 at the European Safeguards Research and Development Association, 15th annual symposium on safeguards and nuclear materials management held in Rome, Italy.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost to Her Majesty's Government for the assistance afforded to Euratom in its design verification of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant and attendant facilities in preparing its nuclear safeguards arrangements for THORP.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of undertaking design verification of the THORP plant was met by the Euratom safeguards directorate and BNFL.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by location the annual heating fuel bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not available in the form requested.

Accounts Services Agency

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is planning to take to retain the Accounts Services Agency in the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 13 December, Official Report, column 493.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Garrett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the report by Stoy Hayward, "Options for the Insolvency Service".

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am currently considering what further work needs to be done following the Stoy Hayward review and shall announce to the House in due course what the next steps will be, including any plans for making public the contents of Stoy Hayward's report.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure in each of the last 12 months was as follows:

1992
December	12
1993
January	14
February	31
March	781
April	15
May	8
June	4
July	11
August	155
September	28
October	11
November	3

For expenditure in earlier years I refer the hon. Member to previous answers:

To the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 3 December 1993, Official Report, column 765, which contains the details for 1992-93; and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 496-97, which has figures for 1991-92 and references to Official Report answers containing information for the earlier years.

Brewers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigation his Department has carried out to find out whether the minimum purchasing limit is being implemented by brewers in line with his Department's policy as set out in the Beer Orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Beer Orders require brewers owning more than 2,000 pubs to permit their tenants to purchase a guest beer. Imposition by the brewers of minimum purchase orders for their own beer is not necessarily incompatible with that requirement. The Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for monitoring compliance with the Beer Orders and anyone who believes they have evidence of a breach of the orders should write to him.

Business Link Projects

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out for each business link project (a) the amount of public sector money scheduled to be spent in 1993-94 and (b) the amount of private sector funding which has been attracted.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has made formal offers of, on average, £984,233 pump-priming grant to three business link companies payable over three years. The level of each offer depends upon the level of assistance the business link needs to help business in its area. Each business link company may also receive public sector funds from other sources such as local authorities or via TECs. The total DTI pump-priming grant to business links in the current financial year is expected to be about £2·9 million. Business links are private sector companies. It would therefore be improper for me to disclose financial information on private sector contributions to each business link project.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what external financing limit has been set for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for 1994-95.

Mr. Eggar: the UKAEA's external financing limit for 1994-95 will be minus £8·8 million.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 7 December.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Council reached agreement on three resolutions. The first of these, on postal services, sets out a framework for future Community measures and major policy goals for liberalisation. It invites the Commission to bring forward proposals defining universal postal services and an appropriate area of reserved services, setting out quality standards and establishing technical standards by July 1994. It stresses the need to make progress on the reform of the terminal dues system and the necessity of a cost-related and quality-related approach, inviting the Commission to report to the Council by 1 March 1994 if further action is necessary.

The second resolution concerned universal service in the telecommunications sector. This sets out a general approach to the provision of universal service for basic voice telephony. I was successful in negotiating a text which takes account of the Government's view, both of the importance of universal service and that the market would provide this service in the majority of cases. The Council agreed a redrafted text which left to member states, rather than the Commission, the appropriate definition of universal service, but set out general criteria for the application of access charges and other financial support to a universal service provider. These will play an important role in ensuring open and fair competition.

The Council also agreed a resolution on the introduction of satellite personal communication services in the Community. This notes the importance of the planned use of satellites in personal communications and stresses the importance of developing a Community policy. It invites member states to make efforts to develop such a policy and invites the Commission to investigate the significance of satellite personal communications, define an effective policy to improve the competitive position of European space and telecommunication industries and to monitor international developments.

There were short general debates on transeuropean networks, interchange of data between administrations and the electronic exchange of commercial statistics. It was agreed that a full evaluation of the needs of member states for IDA would be conducted before the issue was brought before the Council again. The Council adopted conclusions on radio frequencies, inviting the Commission to sign a memorandum of understanding with the European Radiocommunications Committee on frequency matters.

The Commission presented a proposal for a directive on standards for the transmission of television signals and a communication on digital video broadcasting. Council conclusions were agreed supporting the initiative of the European project for digital video broadcasting, stressing the importance of common standards and conditional access systems based on standards that ensure fair and open competition.

No formal votes were taken at the Council.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints the Insolvency Service Agency received about the conduct of independent practitioners during each year since 1990 and so far in 1993.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Insolvency Service Agency does not keep a record specifically relating to complaints about the conduct of insolvency practitioners, but receives a range of correspondence relating to the administration of insolvencies.

Mr. Peter Joyce, the agency's chief executive, answered letters, some of which contained criticism of practitioners, totalling 26 in 1991, 85 in 1992 and 50 to 31 October 1993.

In addition, I and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have responded to letters from hon. Members concerning specific insolvencies totalling 399 in 1991, 355 in 1992 and 314 to 31 October 1993. Officials have answered on our behalf 207 letters in 1992 and 147 to 31 October 1993. Information on how many of these letters contained complaints about independent practitioners could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

No central record is kept of complaints about the conduct of insolvency practitioners made direct to official receivers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many investigations the Insolvency Service Agency has conducted into independent practitioners during each year since 1990 and so far in 1993.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Insolvency Service undertakes routine monitoring visits to practitioners to test their compliance with the legislation. Detailed special inspections are carried out where the facts of the case suggest that this is merited. The following figures are on a financial year basis: detailed records were not maintained prior to 1991-92.

	Number
Monitoring visits:
1991-92	31
1992-93	147
1993-94 (to date)	135

1991-92	2
1992-93	9
1993-94 (to date)	5

Energy Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the matters discussed and decisions taken at the EU Energy Council on 10 December.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC

Energy Council of 10 December indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The Council considered several major issues and received reports from the Commission on other matters of interest. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached unanimous political agreement on a directive harmonising hydrocarbons licensing. This important internal energy market measure will ensure that all member states' licensing procedures for hydrocarbons are transparent, non-discriminatory and competitive. A formal common position should follow at an early date.

Unanimous political agreement was also reached on the Council's assent for a new Commission decision on coal state aids. This will take effect from 1 January 1994. The decision provides for tighter Community rules for state aid to the coal industry until the expiry of the ECSC treaty in 2002. Formal adoption of the Council's assent will take place at an early date.

A new stage was reached in the progress of the two directives on liberalisation of the gas and electricity markets. The Commission presented modified proposals, which took account of the recent opinion of the European Parliament and which it had prepared at the invitation of the Energy Council of 30 November 1992.

The Commission presented a paper on nuclear safety in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. The Council confirmed the need to give priority to nuclear safety in assistance programmes.

The Commission outlined its ideas for developing guidelines for a Community energy policy. The Council invited the Commission to continue its work under the next Presidency.

The Commission reported to the Council on progress on the European energy charter and on its proposals for trans-European energy networks and cohesion. The Council also considered a mid-term review of the Thermie demonstration and dissemination programme and invited the Commission to come forward with a proposal on minimum standards for refrigerators and freezers.

No formal votes were taken by the Council.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether spent nuclear fuel and its constituent parts imported prior to 1976 for reprocessing at Sellafield, without obligation of return of nuclear materials to the country of origin, is subject to the ownership conditions set out in articles 86 and 197 of the Euratom treaty.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 30 November 1993]: Article 86 of the Euratom treaty states that special fissile materials shall be the property of the Community and that the Community's right of ownership shall extend to all special fissile materials, as defined in article 197, which are produced or imported by a member state, a person or an undertaking and are subject to Euratom safeguards.

Equally, article 87 qualifies that right of ownership by providing that member states, persons or undertakings have unlimited right of use and consumption of these materials, subject to the obligations imposed on them by the treaty.

Article 75 states that the provisions of chapter VIII of the treaty, including articles 86 and 87, shall not apply to special fissile materials covered by commitments entered into by a person or undertaking with an international organisation or a national of a third state, where the material is to be processed inside the Community and then returned either to the original organisation or national or to any other consignee likewise outside the Community designated by such organisation or national.

The question of whether any particular special fissile material, which is introduced into the United Kingdom for processing, is subject to articles 86 and 87, depends therefore on whether it is contemplated by the commercial arrangement in question that the special fissile material will be returned after processing to the original organisation or national outside the Community or any other designated consignee outside the Community.

Granby Street Post Office, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask for a full report from the Post Office before he sanctions the closure of the Granby street post office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The decision to close Granby street sub-post office is an operational matter for Post Office Counters Ltd. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is fully aware of the factors which have led to this decision, and he understands that POCL are planning adequate steps to maintain full post office facilities in the vicinity, at larger premises in Lodge lane.

Aliens

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek to obtain a report of the European Parliament Trade and Research Technology Committee's conclusion that the theory that aliens are present in the asteroid belt cannot be ruled out; and what are the implications of this conclusion for public policy.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 14 December 1993]: My officials have seen the report to which my hon. Friend refers by the European Parliament's Committee on Energy, Research and Technology. It has no implications for public policy.

Konver Programme

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how approved Konver-funded schemes will be financed after the expiration of the Konver initiative;

(2) what is his policy towards securing continuing EU support for defence diversification programmes when Konver funding expires; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the period for which Konver funding for approved schemes will last; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Successful Konver applications will be able to obtain grant for expenditure incurred until May 1995 from the European regional development fund and December 1994 from the European social fund.

It is too early to say whether there will be a second Konver initiative. Detailed proposals from the European Commission for the future of structural funds Community initiatives are awaited.

SCOTLAND

Young People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds continued in full-time education in (i) Dundee and (ii) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information for Scotland for the years 1988-92 is set out in the following table. Figures for 1993 are not yet available. Similar figures for Dundee are not available.

[2] Not on a comparable basis. The destination is recorded in Autumn rather than January and age is recorded as at December rather than as at August. Autumn counts for full-time education would be higher than those recorded in January because they would include pupils who left school at the end of the first term in S5 and students who entered further education but subsequently left the course.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds who entered full-time employment in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Young People's Survey provides, bi-ennially, information relating to the destination of school leavers in April after the academic session of leaving school. The table shows estimates of the number of leavers in full-time employment in the following April after the academic year of leaving secondary stages S4 and S5, which broadly equate to 16 and 17-year-olds respectively. Information is not available for Dundee.

Structural Funds

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the future administration of European structural funds in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am currently responsible for expenditure under objectives 2 and 5b of the European structural funds financed by the European regional development fund and the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. While my Department also has a co-ordinating role in relation to the Community support frameworks for the areas of Scotland designated under these objectives, the Department of Employment has hitherto administered European social fund expenditure in these areas.

I have agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment that I should now assume responsibility for European social fund expenditure in Scotland under objectives 1, 2 and 5b of the new regulations. The responsibility for winding up ESF actions under the current programmes for objectives 2 and 5b in Scotland remains with my right hon. Friend, as does responsibility for the administration of Great Britain-wide programmes under objectives 3 and 4.

Legal Services

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made towards the extension of compulsory competitive tendering to legal services.

Mr. Stewart: Since we announced in November 1992 our intention to further extend CCT we have been in discussion with local authority associations about the details of implementation. We are now in a position to consult more widely and have today issued a consultation paper on the Government's implementation plans. Comments are invited by 18 March on a detailed package of measures which will bring the benefits of CCT to local authority legal services. Copies of the consultation paper will be placed in the House Library.

Montrose Bridge

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has of the expected life span of the Montrose new bridge; and what improvements are required for it.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The Montrose new bridge is not a trunk road structure and is therefore the responsibility of Tayside regional council which is the local roads authority.

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the name and job description of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Lang: I have two full-time special advisers appointed to my Department—Mr. Gregor Mackay and Mr. Alan Young. As special advisers, both are outwith the normal Departmental hierarchy and are engaged on duties laid down by me which include contributing to the preparation of speeches and supporting my ministerial colleagues in the Scottish Office as far as time permits.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the political and other advisers employed by his Department; and what remuneration each receives and the previous occupation of each recruited in the last three years.

Mr. Lang: I have two full-time special advisers, Mr. Alan Young and Mr. Gregor Mackay. Both were recruited as graduates in December 1990 and February 1992 respectively and subsequently reappointed in May 1992.

In addition, there are currently two part-time advisers in the Scottish Office. They are Dr. Kenneth Benington and Professor David Tedford who were appointed in August 1988 and October 1992 respectively. They act as advisers to the Scottish Office Industry Department.

It is not our practice to divulge the remuneration of individual advisers.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Lang: I have two full-time special advisers employed in my Department. The conditions under which they are employed are fully detailed in their appointment letter and are in accordance with Cabinet Office guidance. That guidance requires that they do not have access to the kind of information and are not involved in the kind of business which would create any suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Written Questions

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions since 18 November he has not answered, other than with a holding answer, a parliamentary question for written answer on a named day within 10 days of it being tabled; on what subjects; and what is his normal length of time for replying to hon. Members following a holding answer to their written questions for named days.

Mr. Lang: As at 15 December there have been 217 questions tabled for written answer on a named day since 18 November of which 31 did not receive a substantive reply within 10 working days. The questions covered the subjects of the health service, forestry, transport issues and local authority matters. My ministerial colleagues and I ensure that wherever possible all questions receive substantive replies within the timescale set down by the House authorities.

Cormorants

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications his Department has received in the last 12 months for licences to control cormorant numbers on Scottish fisheries; and how many of these have been approved.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Details of the number of applications made and licences issued in the last 12 months by my Department to shoot cormorants in order to prevent serious damage to fisheries are as follows:

	1992 September to December	1993 February to April
Cormorants only applications	6	8
Licences granted	6	7
Cormorants and sawbill duck applications	3	17
Licences granted	0	14

Licence information for autumn 1993—September to December—is not yet available.

Rams

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will continue the supply of rams in crofting areas under the livestock improvement schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: In August my Department invited applications from crofting townships for the supply of rams for 1993-94. Some 1,460 rams have since been supplied to over 200 townships.

My Department is currently reviewing all the livestock improvement schemes for crofters following a consultation exercise undertaken earlier this year. I hope to announce a decision soon on the future operation of these schemes.

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the officials present at a meeting held on or between 20 and 23 August to consider the terms of the reply received from Her Majesty's Treasury to a letter sent on 6 August by the acting chief executive of the health service in Scotland regarding the former general manager of the Greater Glasgow health board, Mr. Laurence Peterken.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December 1993]: No such meeting took place on or between 20 and 23 August. However, there was a meeting on 30 August involving officials of the Scottish Office NHS Management Executive, Finance Group and Solicitor's Office.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter sent on 6 August by the acting chief executive of the health service in Scotland to the Treasury regarding the former general manager of the Greater Glasgow health board, Mr. Laurence Peterken.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December 1993]: No. The document concerned relates to the private affairs of an individual and it is long-established Government policy not to disclose such documents.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 180, on what date his views were sought on the appointment of Mr. Laurence Peterken to the post of special projects director with the national health service management executive.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 December 1993]: On 5 November 1993.

Health Boards (Expenditure)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to review the procedures whereby he is informed of representations made to Her Majesty's Treasury by senior officials in his Department in respect of proposed expenditure by health boards in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December 1993]: Yes. As my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State indicated to the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs, this is already happening.

Forestry

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy to inform the public when a definitive date is known for the submission of the report of the interdepartmental forestry review group to Ministers;

(2) what parliamentary procedure he will adopt to enact the conclusions of the interdepartmental forestry review group once they have been presented to Ministers.

Sir Hector Monro: Once the forestry review group has submitted its confidential advice, early next year, Ministers will require some time to consider it and decide what action, if any, should be taken.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for public and parliamentary consultation on the final report by the forestry review group before a decision is taken by Ministers.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 29 November 1993]: I expect to receive the review group's report in the new year. This report will remain confidential to Ministers. There will be full consultation of the general public and interested bodies on the options preferred by Ministers before matters are taken forward. The form and timing of consultation will depend on the advice which the review group offers Ministers and what conclusions Ministers draw from that advice.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific access agreements have been negotiated in respect of areas of Forestry Commission land in each of the last five years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The arrangements for securing continued access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission, by means of agreements entered into between the Commission and local authorities before their sale, were introduced in October 1991. The Commission has since concluded access agreements with local authorities for the following woodlands:

County/Region and Woodland	Area (hectares)

Negotiations are still taking place in a number of other cases.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in respect of the continuation of the right to roam on publicly owned forestry land in the Clydebank and Milngavie constituency.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Our policy is to allow the public "freedom to roam" on all forestry land managed by the Forestry Commission, subject only to considerations of safety, conservation and any legal constraints. We have no plans to change that policy.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision regarding freedom to roam has been attached to the offer for sale of public woodland between Glasgow and Loch Lomond; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the proposed sale of Forestry Commission woodlands in the Kilpatrick hills which have been selected for sale as part of the Commission's current disposals programme. Consideration was given to securing continued public access to these woodlands after sale, by means of a prior agreement entered into between the Commission and the local authority under the arrangements introduced in October 1991. This did not prove possible, however, as the access routes to the woodlands are across land belonging to third parties, none of whom wished to participate in an agreement.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the annual cost to her Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. Jack: The cost of providing a car service to the Ministers in this Department was £186,375 in the 1990-91 financial year. Four vehicles were involved.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all the woods owned by the Forestry Commission in East Anglia.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 10 December 1993, Official Report, column 432.

Fishing Fleets

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the size of each of the 11 EC fishing fleets; and what is the percentage difference in size between the United Kingdom and Spanish fleets.

Mr. Jack: The following figures on fleet sizes as at 1 January 1992 are derived from member states' MAGP decisions dated 21 December 1992, as amended.

	Number of vessels	Total gross registered tonnage	Total engine power (in Kilowatts)
Belgium	205	27,089	79,816
Denmark	2,749	114,926	488,278
France	7,393	211,240	1,189,849
Germany	Not given	78,341	190,273
Greece	21,777	129,313	710,062
Ireland	Not given	52,912	186,054
Italy	16,670	267,471	1,536,518
Netherlands	520	140,460	441,953
Portugal[1]	15,920	187,993	504,067
Spain	20,518	657,680	1,978,036
United Kingdom	11,411	214,733	1,228,922

[1] Includes Azores and Madeira.

The Spanish fleet, which includes vessels fishing in the Mediterranean and those fishing in third country waters and international waters, thus has 80 per cent. more vessels than the United Kingdom fleet.

Fur Farms

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to introduce a ban on fur factory farms.

Mr. Soames: We are seeking the best possible welfare standards for all types of fur farming on a European Community basis.

Vitamin supplements

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to restrict the sale of vitamin supplements.

Mr. Soames: I have no plans at present to restrict the sale of vitamin supplements.

EC Surplus Food Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation and monitoring is undertaken of charitable and non-profit making organisations involved in the distribution of produce to eligible recipients under the EC surplus food scheme.

Mr. Jack: Intervention Board executive agency officers annually inspect designated organisations' records and up to 30 per cent. of all organisations are visited by MAFF officers to check that produce is being distributed in accordance with the scheme's rules.

Brucellosis

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 25 November, Official Report, columns 120-22, if she will provide the most recent figures she has available giving the total number of cattle testing positive for brucellosis; how many contracted the disease outside the United Kingdom and from which countries; how many were sero-positive before being imported into the United Kingdom and if any of those originate from herds officially declared to be brucellosis free; if the cattle testing sero-positive were subject to tests for the disease within 30 days of their export to this country; if the certification which accompanied each consignment of infected cattle provided an accurate account of the health of each animal in the consignments bound for the United Kingdom; and if the certification was fully compliant with the EC rules in other respects.

Mr. Soames: I wish to take this opportunity to correct the information I gave in my reply of 25 November. The number of cattle which had reacted positively to serological tests for brucellosis at the time the answer was given was 29 not 21. There have been no further positive reactions since then.

As indicated in my earlier reply detailed epidemiological investigations to determine the source of infection are continuing. It is not therefore possible to say if any of the cattle contracted the disease outside the United Kingdom. All the imported animals were accompanied by certification confirming that they originated from officially brucellosis-free herds and had been tested negative for brucellosis within the 30 days prior to export. We have no reason to doubt the accuracy of the certification, which complied fully with EC rules.

Ewe Premium Quota

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the countries in the EC which have not used up their full allocation of ewe premium quota and list the number of unused units in each case; and what steps she has taken, or is taking, to raise with the Commission the possibility of transferring the unused units of quota to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: Quotas operate for the first time under the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme. Payment details are not yet available for that scheme. I regret it is not possible to provide the information requested. More than one year's figures will be needed before conclusions can be drawn as to the long-term quota position in member states.

Farm Incomes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of livestock farmers in the less-favoured areas producing (a) a net farm income and (b) cash income of (i) less than zero, (ii) less than £5,000, (iii) £5,000 to less than £10,000, (iv) £10,000 to less than £15,000, (v) £15,000 to less than £20,000 and (vi) £20,000 and over at the latest available date.

Mr. Jack: The latest available information, which is in the Library of the House, relating to survey results for 1991-92, is published in table 1·17 of "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1991-92". Data for 1992-93 are being analysed and will be published at the end of March 1994 in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1992-93", a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Marine Ecosystem

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she will take to ensure that the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan will take account of the need to protect marine ecosystems and wildlife.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry aims to build on the steps it has already taken to protect the marine esosystem and wildlife, for example by extending the powers of sea fisheries committees to give them a firmer basis for taking account of environmental needs, and by phasing out the dumping of industrial and other wastes at sea. This and other policies of the Ministry will be reflected in the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will consult her ministerial colleagues to make sure that the national sustainable strategy will include a sustainable management system for marine fisheries.

Mr. Jack: Marine fisheries is one of the subjects addressed in the United Kingdom national sustainability strategy which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment proposes to publish in January 1994.

Sheep Quotas

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what legislation is being proposed to assist producers in applying for an allocation of sheep quotas from the national reserve.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 December 1993]: The legislation governing the national reserve came into force on 7 December. Producers asking for an application form will be sent an accompanying explanatory leaflet that gives detailed guidance about how to fill in the application form. Further explanatory leaflets and notes for guidance will be prepared in due course. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be making separate arrangements in Scotland.

The text of a letter sent to sheep producers in England which provides further guidance is available in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has had concerning the administration and operation of the national reserve of sheep quotas; what plans she has to extend the national reserve; and what information she has in respect of the systems in force in each other European Union country.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 December 1993]: I have received a number of representations on this subject from both organisations and individual producers. The methodology for calculating the size of the national reserves is fixed under Community legislation which also sets out a number of categories of producers who have access to the reserves. The 1993 national reserve of sheep quota comprises some 380,000 units of quota. In addition, some 400,000 units of quota will be available for producers who claimed premium for the first time under the 1992 scheme. The reserves for 1994 and subsequent years will be made up almost entirely of siphoned quota. Each member state is bound by the terms of the Community legislation and is obliged to implement the arrangements accordingly.

Salmon Prices

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action her Department is taking to ensure that the reference price for salmon to be introduced by the European Commission on 1 January 1994 is realistic.

Sir Hector Monro: I have been asked to reply.

Scottish Office officials have submitted detailed information on market prices and production costs to contribute to the Commission's decision on a reference price for salmon. They have met Commission officials to discuss that information in detail and have made representations that the reference price should be significantly higher than the recently imposed minimum import price.

TRANSPORT

British Transport Police

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he intends to make for the future organisation of the British Transport police from April 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The British Transport Police will continue, as a unified public force, to police Britain's rail network, including services to the London Underground and the docklands light railway.

Police services will be provided to all railway operators, who will be obliged, through licence conditions, to use and pay for all law and order functions that require the use of professional police resources. Current functions include a range of activities in the prevention, investigation and detection of crime on the rail network, including safety, anti-terrorism, crime prevention and detection, public order, protecting public space and supporting the victims of crime.

Operators will be consulted about the level of resources required, and will have discretion, as now, to use non-BTP resources for ancillary tasks such as the static guarding of premises, supervision of car parks and the escort of high value loads.

The British Railways Board will remain the employer of the BTP for the time being. We intend to seek parliamentary approval at the earliest opportunity of the necessary legislation for Railtrack to become the employer of the BTP, until such time as Railtrack is privatised, when the BTP committee will become the employer.

The employer of the BTP will remain responsible for its funding, and will recover costs from other operators by charging. It will be for the employer to ensure that all the appropriate charges are collected.

While BR remains the employer of the BTP, it will retain the responsibility for appointing the chairman and members of the BTP committee.

To enable the BR Board to provide services to other users of the police on a repayment basis, we shall lay before Parliament in the spring some amendments to the existing secondary legislation—the British Transport Police Force Scheme (Amendment) Order 1992.

Merchant Fleet

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to assist the future development of the British merchant fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government's economic and fiscal policies, which have produced low interest rates, low inflation and low taxation, have benefited industry as a whole, including shipping. However, where I can, I am keen to bring forward additional measures which help the shipping industry.

Accordingly, following extensive public consultation, new regulations governing the registration of ships in the United Kingdom were made today and will shortly be laid before Parliament in accordance with section 3 of the Merchant Shipping (Registration, etc.) Act 1993. These regulations represent a considerable simplification and consolidation of the existing mix of primary and secondary legislation which deals with the registration of merchant ships, small ships and fishing vessels, as well as the approval of names. I have no doubt that they will be welcomed by all who have to use them.

In addition the new regulations will, for the first time, allow bareboat chartered vessels to be brought on to the United Kingdom register for the duration of the charter period. I hope that this flexibility will encourage more British shipowners to fly the Red Ensign.

It is my intention that these regulations should come into force on 21 March 1994.

Secondly, I will shortly be consulting on changes to the current merchant navy office nationality rules. Under the new proposal the intention is that there should be no officer nationality requirements for United Kingdom registered ships except for certain "strategic" ships which will still be required to have a British, British Commonwealth, NATO or EC national as master.

I recognise that in allowing shipowners the option of employing non-United Kingdom officers, appropriate measures will be required to ensure that safety is not compromised. The proposed relaxation will, therefore, be accompanied by a scheme of licensing to ensure that all non-United Kingdom officers are not only professionally competent but have a good command of the English language and that masters have an appropriate level of understanding of British maritime law. A licence will be pre-requisite both to initial employment and to continuing employment on board a British flagged ship.

When these two measures are introduced—which, subject to the consultation, should be no later than spring 1994—the Government will have given effect to all the recommendations of the 1990 joint working party on British shipping.

This Government have a strong commitment to the training of British seafarers which, we recognise, is of vital importance to the long-term health of the industry and to associated onshore maritime businesses.

The present Government assistance for training scheme is a very successful form of support for our merchant shipping industry. The scheme, which has its origins in the 1988 Merchant Shipping Act, allows financial support to be given towards the cost of training officers and ratings to the standard of a first certificate of competency for service in merchant ships. Since its inception almost 2,000 cadets have benefited from the scheme at the aggregate cost of £11·6 million.

But I recognise that it is now appropriate to offer additional help to encourage the introduction of NVQ/SVQ training for those at sea while at the same time creating a pool of British officers with a career structure which will take them from cadet to senior officer level. I have, therefore, decided to extend training support to British junior officers while they are studying for their higher certificates of competency. With on-board assessment it should be possible for trainees to reach class 2 levels of competency within 12-18 months.

The new scheme will initially be for a trial period of three years. Assistance will take the form of a per capita cash contribution. The £1·5 million which will be made available in the first year will be targeted at helping those cadets who have been through the GAFT scheme and who, therefore, hold a first certificate of competency. Priority will be given to junior officers employed on ships on the British register.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has not only been able to confirm his willingness to continue to support the GAFT scheme but has also been able to commit resources to ensure the successful launch and ongoing assessment of this NVQ/SVQ initiative.

I believe that this package of measures represents further evidence of the Government's continuing commitment to the United Kingdom merchant fleet.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the allocation of the transport supplementary grant and credit approvals for capital expenditure on local roads and transport in England for 1994-95.

Mr. MacGregor: This year we are taking all local expenditure together, in accordance with the new package approach to funding. A total of £1,008 million is to be allocated to local highway authorities and passenger transport authorities in England for capital expenditure on their local transport infrastructure in 1994-95. This consists of £329 million in transport supplementary grant —TSG—plus £666 million in annual capital guideline—ACG—and supplementary credit approval—SCA, and £13 million in public transport facilities grant. With the help of capital reserves and developer contributions we therefore expect authorities to be able to spend considerably over £1,000 million in total.

Tables 1, 2 and 3 deal with the roads element of the settlement. Table 1 sets out the national totals for different types of expenditure. Table 2 shows the total amounts of TSG, credit approval and gross approved expenditure for each of the 108 local highway authorities. The Department's regional offices are notifying them today of their allocations.

The Government resources available for local roads are some 11 per cent. less than in 1993-94, but are comparable with those for 1992-93. I am glad to announce that authorities will be able to make a start on 35 important road schemes. Thirty-one will be accepted for TSG and four will be supported with only credit approvals.

The new major schemes will, like the 234 others that continue to receive support, relieve communities from the burden of heavy through traffic, and help economic regeneration in towns.

Road safety remains a high priority. Within the reduced overall total, the level of funding for local safety schemes has been maintained at the record 1993-94 level of £50 million. Local authorities continue to make good use of the funds. The 1994-95 allocation should finance schemes with potential to save over 60 lives and prevent about 750 serious injuries and some 4,000 other casualties in a 12-month period.

The £137 million accepted expenditure for bridge maintenance—the same level as last year—should allow authorities to keep up the momentum of this vital work. It has not yet been possible to establish a satisfactory way to help British Rail fund their share of the cost of assessing their road bridges. To avoid further delay on this important work it has been decided that in 1994-95 it should be funded from allocations to local highway authorities. Within the unchanged total for bridges, the distribution of allocations for 1994-95 takes account of this extra responsibility.

This is the first year in which urban transport packages have featured in the local transport settlement. The submission of packages has been optional in this settlement: but from next year packages are expected to become the norm for urban areas. In submitting a package bid, authorities are required to base proposals on a coherent transport strategy which covers all relevant modes of transport.

The settlement will allow a number of packages to get off to a strong start. Two packages submitted this year for metropolitan areas—the West Midlands and Leeds—have been allocated significant levels of funding. In addition, we are giving substantial support to a number of shire town packages.

The public transport settlement makes £103·577 million available, in addition to the funds provided for packages, and cover for ERDF. The Government's substantial commitment to the South Yorkshire Supertram continues, and there is continued funding for the Leeds/Bradford electrification. New starts include the next phase of the Robin Hood Line in Nottinghamshire and renewal of the electrical and traction equipment of the Blackpool tramway.

Marchioness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has anything to add to the oral ministerial statement of 9 July 1992, Official Report, column 699, that there was no case for an inquiry into the Marchioness disaster since it was clear that all the facts had been established.

Mr. Norris: No.

Lorries (Loads)

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a requirement for lorries carrying minerals, stone, sand, grit and excavated materials on public roads to have such loads securely sheeted.

Mr. Key: The safety of loads on vehicles used on the roads is controlled by the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986. Regulation 100(2) requires that any load carried by a vehicle be secured, if necessary, by additional restraints so that it is not likely to cause danger or nuisance by moving, falling or blowing off the vehicle. This would cover the sheeting of loads.

In addition, regulations have recently been introduced under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 specifically to require lorries working in quarries to sheet their loads to prevent dust. While these regulations do not apply on a public road, vehicles will need to be sheeted before entering a quarry and to remain sheeted after loading as far as the exit from the site. Drivers are unlikely to deliberately remove the sheeting once on the road.

Road Safety Report

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the next road safety report will be published.

Mr. Key: We plan to issue a new road safety report in about a year's time.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Norris: The cost of advertising for publicity campaigns by my Department for each year since 1979 is as follows:

	£'000s
1979-80	5,840
1980-81	5,704
1981-82	5,488
1982-83	4,648

	£'000s
1983-84	6,499
1984-85	5,279
1985-86	5,788
1986-87	5,819
1987-88	5,510
1988-89	5,709
1989-90	6,434
1990-91	8,062
1991-92	9,522
1992-93	9,831
[1]1993-94	9,555

[1] estimated

Cost of advertising for each of last 12 months cannot be readily calculated since advertising campaigns are planned, researched and executed over a period of months with expenditure being incurred over a similar period. Therefore only the total annual cost of campaigns has been given.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce details of his Department's expenditure on trunk roads for 1994-95.

Mr. Key: I expect to make an announcement about my plans for national roads early in the new year.

Klondyker Ships

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to ensure the safety of Klondyker ships in United Kingdom territorial waters but outside the Lerwick harbour boundary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The primary responsibility for ensuring the safety of any ship rests with the flag state.

As the Klondykers are engaging in a commercial activity they require a licence, in this case from the Secretary of State for Scotland. Section 27 of Merchant Shipping Act 1979 allows the inspection of any such foreign ship in United Kingdom territorial waters. My right hon. Friend has implemented an intensive programme of inspections of Klondyker ships around the Shetland Islands.

A code of practice for Klondykers is being prepared. This will apply to vessels within United Kingdom territorial limits.

The Government will take appropriate action where there is a threat to human life or to the environment.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91 was £186,000. Five vehicles were involved. These charges did not cover the full cost of the car service and rates have since been raised to reflect this.

Air Safety

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the titles, names of contractors and dates of all external research contracts on air safety commissioned by his Department since 1985.

Mr. Norris: Following an examination of the Department's records I can inform the hon. Member that the only external safety-related research directly commissioned by the Department are the following:

1. Impact Modelling Programme commissioned with the University of Cranfield's Impact Centre in 1991, and;
2. Explosion/Decompression Signature Identification Research Programme, commissioned with the University of Southampton in 1993.

These are both in support of the Department's air accident investigation branch.

The responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. As a consequence research aimed at improving safety standards is commissioned by the Authority. Occasionally the Department has contributed funds for specific projects managed by the CAA.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice is given to civil pilots concerning the actions to be taken to maximise safety when entering an area known to be subject to directional flow control for military low flying.

Mr. Norris: In the interest of mutual flight safety civilian pilots have been given advice and information on military low flying operations and the directional flow control for military low flying in the following recent publications and circulars:

1. June 1993—Information Circular AIC 89/1993.
2. August 1993—The United Kingdom Aeronautical Information Publication (the United Kingdom Air Pilot) section RAC 5-0-1.1.
3. August 1993—The Civil Aviation Authority's General Aviation Safety Information Leaflet.

I have made arrangements with the Civil Aviation Authority for the hon. Member to receive copies of the documents mentioned.

MV Braer

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the report of the Donaldson inquiry into the Braer incident at Orkney will be published.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 24 November, column 64.

Thameslink

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made in the Government's public spending plans for 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97 for expenditure on improvements to Thameslink including those that British Rail and London Underground have advised will be required for the King's Cross-St. Pancras interchange and the Victoria and Piccadilly lines to be able to cope with commuters using the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Norris: No provision has been made as yet. We are giving careful consideration to the 29 October report from Union Railways and to the comments which we have received from London Transport.

It is too early to say what provision might be required.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call off DVLA's review into its local offices until the trail of automated direct registration has been completed; and how the DVLA's review can come to any conclusions before the direct registration trail has been completed.

Mr. Key: No. The review will provide the agency with a range of options for the future. Estimates of the effect of automated first registration on local offices have been built into the business case for the project and the consultants carrying out the review will take these into account in framing their proposals.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many roadside checks Touche Ross consultants attended while carrying out the review for DVLA on the work of inquiry officers in London;

(2) on how many occasions Touche Ross consultants accompanied inquiry officers on duty whilst compiling its report on the work of DVLA inquiry officers in London;

(3) what were the costs of the recent review of inquiry officers' work in DVLA enforcement offices in Sidcup and Great Marlborough street, London.

Mr. Key: Touche Ross has not carried out any investigation into the work of these officers. It has been advising the agency on its overall market testing strategy for 1993-94, of which the LEO inquiry officers are only one element.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of new DVLA stationery bearing the charter mark; and whether DVLA has scrapped all existing non-charter mark stationery.

Mr. Key: There is no additional cost. The charter mark logo is being incorporated into new stationery as it is reprinted in the normal course of business with old stocks being used up first.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of producing the DVLA staff magazine "Licence" for the year 1992-93 and for the current financial year to date.

Mr. Key: The cost of producing "Licence" for 1992-93 was £40,000. The cost so far for the current financial year is £25,000.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what were the total number and value of returned cheques passed to the DVLA staff magazine Licence for the financial year 1992-93 and for the current financial year to date;

(2) what were the total number and value of returned cheques passed to DVLA for the financial year 1992-93 and for the current financial year to date.

Mr. Key: Since April 1992 Post Office Counters Ltd. has been responsible for recover, but not prosecution, action on cheques accepted by them in payment for vehicle excise licences. The numbers and value are:

	April 1992 to March 1993	April 1993 to November 1993
Number	132,000	81,000
Value	£13 million	£9 million

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if Touche Ross consultants have carried out a review of inquiry officers' work in the DVLA: and whether consultants visited the enforcement offices concerned.

Mr. Key: No such review has taken place.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if staff employed by DVLA have been issued with instructions not to answer questions from National Audit Office staff carrying out a study into vehicle excise duty collection-enforcement, unless a manager is present.

Mr. Key: The guidance notes issued to DVLA staff are designed to help the NAO to carry out their work as efficiently as possible. To avoid any misunderstandings an account of all NAO interviews will be kept by a designated staff member. All staff interviewed are asked to give honest, factual and considered answers. This arrangement is in accordance with standard procedures and was agreed with the NAO team involved in this study.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the amount of unpaid vehicle excise duty in the United Kingdom for each year from 1987-88;

(2) if he will estimate for the financial year 1992-93 the amount of unpaid vehicle excise duty in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key: The figures for Great Britain with the revenue recovered from fines and penalties are as follows:

£ million

	Unpaid VED	Revenue from fines and penalties
1987-88	95	23·6
1988-89	100	25·7
1989-90	105	26
1990-91	105	27·6
1991-92	115	34·4
1992-93	130	37·5

In addition, in 1992-93 an extra £14 million in revenue was raised through evaders relicensing vehicles as a direct result of enforcement action. Corresponding figures are not available for earlier years.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by vehicle registration office, the number, grades and salary costs of staff employed on vehicle excise duty enforcement and the total amount of revenue collected by those staff in 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The information requested is as follows:

Total	37·5

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each no further steps code the number of vehicle excise duty offence reports written off for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Key: VED offence reports are written off as "no further steps" when enforcement action has had to be discontinued for a specified reason. The figures for 1992-93 were:

	Number
NFS 1 (unable to trace the offender or prove liability for the offence)	408,000
NFS 2 (time expired for court action)	1,200
NFS 3 (insufficient staff resource)	1,200

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicle excise duty offence reports (a) were settled out of court or (b) resulted in a prosecution and fines, in 1992-93 and in the current financial year.

Mr. Key: The number of VED enforcement cases brought to a successful conclusion in 1992-93 and between April and November 1993 were:

	1992-93 April-March	1993-94 April-November
By out of court settlement	242,000	157,000
By prosecution	193,000	140,000

In addition, in 1992-93 180,000 motorists were induced to take out a licence as a direct result of enforcement action. To November this year the figure stands at 137,000.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many vehicle excise offences reports have been generated so far this financial year;

(2) how many vehicle excise offences reports were received by DVLA in 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The number of vehicles reported to DVLA for alleged VED offences in 1992-93 was 1·8 million and 1·2 million for this financial year to November.

Child Road Deaths

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year since 1979 the number of children below 16 years of age killed as a result of road traffic accidents (a) between 7 am and 10 am and (b) between 2 pm and 6 pm when clocks were set at (i) GMT and (ii) BST.

Mr. Key: The information requested is shown in the table.

The data indicate that:

(a) there are more child road deaths in the summer than in the winter and that especially in the summer many more deaths occur in the afternoon, when children are out and about more; and

(b) very significant progress has been made over this period in reducing child road casualties but more needs to be done.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken to evaluate the performance of catalytic converters in a typical urban driving situation in Britain; and whether the reductions in emissions have been quantified.

Mr. Key: The Department has a number of research programmes on vehicles emissions which include analysis of catalyst cars. Recent unpublished work at the Warren Spring Laboratory, has compared the emission performance of catalyst-equipped cars against non-catalyst cars, for an equal mix of hot start and normal ambient cold start operation, over actual urban road driving and over dynamometer driving cycles that simulate typical urban driving. The results show, on average, that a catalyst equipped car reduces carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen by 76 per cent., 81 per cent., and 77 per cent. respectively over an equivalent non-catalyst car over a typical journey length of 4 km. Similar research carried out under the EU Drive programme, but under hot starting conditions only, shows reductions of 77 per cent., 90 per cent. and 85 per cent. respectively for the same pollutants.

Heavy Vehicles

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate has been made of the volume of heavy goods vehicle traffic that will transfer from the M6 to the proposed Birmingham northern relief road; and what percentage this is of through and overall HGV traffic.

Mr. Key: The BNRR concessionaire, Midland Expressway Ltd., currently estimates that by the design year of 2011 the HGV traffic on BNRR would be as follows, about 55 per cent.—or approximately 7,000 vehicles per day—of the through trips which otherwise would have used M6 between junctions 4 and 11 are predicted to transfer. These figures represent up to about 20 per cent. of the total HGV traffic along this section of M6.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what authority has been given or licences issued by his Department to Collins Road Services or to CRS to operate or park heavy vehicles on land known as Chaney's, Hubbards farm, West Drayton road, Hillingdon, Middlesex; what consultations have taken place with the London borough of Hillingdon on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 December 1993]: Decisions on individual operator licences are the responsibility of the traffic commissioners. I have asked the traffic commissioner for the south-eastern and metropolitan traffic area to write to my hon. Friend.

Trunk Road Assessment

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the report of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment on how far new roads generate traffic will be published; and what were the reasons for delay in publication.

Mr. Key: The standing committee on trunk road assessment is still looking into the question of generated traffic and has not yet reported its findings to my Department.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each contract made with NHS trusts by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) regional health authorities for the current year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The readily available information is shown in the table. More detailed information could only be provided at disproportionate cost. A list of contracts made by trusts with regional health authorities is not available centrally.

EC Health Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for each EC country for the latest available year, (a) the life expectancy for men and women and (b) the death rate from (i) asthma, (ii) heart disease, (iii) breast cancer, (iv) lung cancer and (v) suicide, (c) the deaths from road traffic accidents per head of population, (d) the number of under-16 pregnancies per 1,000 population, (e) the number of 11 to 15-year-old boys and girls smoking per 1,000 girls and boys and (f) the number of (1) nurses and (2) midwives per head of population.

Mr. Sackville: The life expectancy for men and women in each European Economic Community country for the latest available year is shown in Table 1. Table 2 shows death rates per 100,000 population for various causes of deaths.

The number of under 16 pregnancies per 1,000 population for each EEC country is not available centrally. This information is collected for England and Wales. For the latest available year, 1991, the pregnancy rate is 9·3 per 1,000 girls in the 13-15 age group. Comparable data are not available for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

The number of 11 to 15-year-old boys and girls smoking per 1,000 population is not available centrally. However, a report on the European position on smoking amongst 11 to 15-year-old children in 1990 was published by the European Bureau for Action on Smoking Prevention (BASP). The survey was based on a small sample of only 9,312 young people (4,778 boys and 4,534 girls) representing about 800 young people per country (250 in Luxembourg) and the results are shown in table 3.

Information on the number of nurses and midwives per head of population for each EEC country is not available centrally.

Zantac

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the health risks of the colouring matter in the drug Zantac.

Mr. Sackville: Zantac is a licensed product. Before any medicinal product may be marketed in the United Kingdom a full assessment of the safety, quality and efficacy is carried out to enable a product licence to be granted by the licensing authority. This assessment also includes consideration of any excipients. All drugs by necessity contain excipients, these are products which must be present for a defined purpose and which must not be of unacceptable toxicity. Colouring agents in medicines are examples of excipients. The colouring in Zantac is one of those permitted by an European Community directive which states that the use of only certain colours in medicinal products is allowed.

Health Service Gifts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what gifts or hospitality officers or directors of health authorities and trusts may accept; and whether such acceptance is required to be recorded.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance on the acceptance of gifts and hospitality is contained in HSG(93)5, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Staffing

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were employed in the national health service for the year 1993 in (a) nursing and midwifery, (b) medical and dental and (c) others, to include professional/technical, ancillary, administration/clerical, maintenance, managers, ambulance, staff and others.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest available information is shown in the table.

National health service staff groups in England at 30 September 1992 in whole-time equivalents in the hospital and community health service.

	Numbers
NHS Staff Group
Nursing and Midwifery	378,790
Medical and Dental	47,220
Others	363,980
Total	789,990

Notes:

1. All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.
2. Figures exclude general medical and dental practice staff.

Acute Beds

Mr. Raymond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will publish a table showing the number of acute beds available in each accident and emergency department in hospitals within the Greater London area in each year since 1989;

(2) if she will estimate how many acute beds will be available in each accident and emergency department in hospitals in the Greater London area in the first week on January 1994.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. Each authority or trust decides the number of beds to be designated as accident and emergency beds in the light of local needs and experience.

Neurosurgery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what neurosurgical advice is being made available to her on the future location of the regional neurosurgery now carried out at the Brook Hospital;

(2) if proposals for the future location of the South East Thames regional neurosciences will be based on (a) advice from a professor of psychiatry, (b) advice from the Brook team or (c) others.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received advice from a number of sources, including the South East Thames regional health authority review of regional neurosciences, the neurosciences specialty review and the special health authority research review. All advice will be considered carefully alongside proposals for the development of a neurosciences centre from the Guy's and St. Thomas' Hospital Trust, and from King's Healthcare Trust and the Maudsley hospital.

NHS Trusts (Cars)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the number and average cost of cars made available by trusts in the Greater London area to (a) chief executives, (b) senior managers, (c) doctors, (d) nurses, (e) midwives and (f) other staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: Every health authority and national health service trust is required to complete an annual financial return giving details of total expenditure on leased and contract car hire charges. This includes the cost of charges passed on to staff. Detailed information about the number of cars and their allocation is not available centrally.

Rights of the Child

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for health what consideration her Department has given to articles 9 and 18.2 of the UN convention on the rights of the child in relation to the costs to parents of visiting children in hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Consistent with articles 9 and 18.2, we attach particular importance in involving parents in the care and treatment of their children. Under the hospital travel costs scheme, financial assistance is available to parents on low incomes to accompany their children to and from hospital where this is medically necessary. Most national health service hospitals also provide accommodation for parents to enable them to stay overnight at the hospital whilst their children receive treatment. Additional financial help is available from the social fund to enable parents in receipt of income support to visit their children in hospital.

NHS Trusts Budget

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total budget for NHS trusts for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested for 1992-93 and 1993-94 is shown in the table. The information for 1994-95 will be available in April 1994 following the submission of trust business plans for that year.

NHS Public Bodies

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total budget for NHS public bodies for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: Gross national health service expenditure was £29,413 million in 1992-93. It is forecast to be £30,253 million in 1993-94, and planned to rise to £31,937 in 1994-95.

Air Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the report of the Advisory Group on Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes on Nitrogen Dioxide.

Mr. Sackville: Oxides of Nitrogen: 3rd report by the Advisory Group on the Medical Aspects of Air Pollution Episodes was published on Monday 13 December. Copies are available in the Library.

Royal Marsden Hospital

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from charitable donors concerning the loss of the new facilities to which they contributed at the Royal Marsden hospital since the publication of the special review report on cancer services.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the publication of the speciality review report on cancer services in London, we have received 28 such representations, both from organisations and from individuals.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received from the general public in connection with the future of the Royal Marsden hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: Up to 14 December we had received representations from 1,450 hon. Members and members of the public and two petitions.

Hospices

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretry of State for Health what assessment she has made of the future demand for hospices in Lancashire and the north-west.

Mr. Sackville: It is for health authorities to assess the palliative and other health care needs of their resident populations and ensure that appropriate services are provided, within available resources and reflecting national priorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bruce Martin, chairman of North Western regional health authority, for information on assessments made by that authority.

London Hospitals (Assaults)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital staff have been assaulted by patients or the general public at hospitals in the four regional health authorities that cover the Greater London area during the last 12 months.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the individual regional health authorities for details.

Heart Pacemakers

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many incidents there have been, nationwide, where the cause of death of a patient fitted with Siemens pacemaker lead models 1010T, 1050T and prototype T93 has been related to the pacemaker lead.

Mr. Sackville: According to information held by the National Pacemaker Database there are no recorded incidents. This is a correction to the answer I provided in my reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Ms Prentice) on 4 November 1993 at column 452.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make improvements to the London ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the last year the London ambulance service (LAS) has made progress both towards improving its response times and in implementing the recommendations of the inquiry into its performance set up last autumn. The management of the service has been re-structured and lines of management accountability strengthened. These moves complement the substantial investment which the Government have made in the service. For example, the number of fully trained paramedics has risen in the last three years from three to 400.

I am pleased to announce today that a further £14·8 million will be invested in the LAS next year. This will make a significant contribution to improving services further, especially by enabling the LAS to replace its older vehicles with 120 new accident and emergency ambulances, over one third of its current fleet, by the summer.

Of the new money, £6·8 million in revenue will be provided by the four Thames Regions. In addition to this, the Government will provide an extra £8 million. £4 million extra capital investment will buy the further 120 new accident and emergency vehicles. The remaining £4 million in revenue funding will be used to increase front line ambulance crews and to train more staff to the required level of paramedic skills.

The Government are determined that this substantial extra investment is well spent and that it produces significant improvements in patient services. For this reason the extra money will be tied to firm targets for improving ambulance performance. The LAS remains below the standard set out in the patients charter with around 60 per cent. of 999 calls currently answered within 14 minutes. We have agreed with the LAS that this should rise to 80 per cent. by next September and to 85 per cent. by April 1995. The Government will keep the LAS under close scrutiny to ensure that these targets are met.

"Making London Better"

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next intends to meet the chairman of the North East Thames regional health authority to discuss progress implementing "Making London Better".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am writing today to Sir William Staveley, Chairman of the North East Thames regional health authority, to inform him of decisions which I have taken relating to health services in north-east London. These will bring an end to uncertainty in the health service in this part of London and will enable us to take a decisive step forward towards better patient care. I intend to make a further announcement in the new year relating to services in other parts of the capital.

A copy of my letter to Sir William, and a further more detailed letter to his regional general manager, will be placed in the Library.

"Making London Better" made clear the strategic need to retain an accident and emergency (A and E) department at University College hospital/Middlesex in order to serve a part of London with a significant local resident population and heavy concentration of visitors, shoppers and commuters. The Government remain committed to this policy, as they do to retaining University College London hospitals (UCLH) as a world-class centre of medical teaching and research. The Government will therefore ensure that UCLH has a secure future.

UCLH will need to make further progress to improve its efficiency. We welcome the fact that, after pressure from its main purchaser, the Camden and Islington health authority, it has already taken steps to do so. In order to ensure that some local acute services are retained at UCLH, discussions are in progress at local level. In addition, we shall accept the advice of the independent specialty reviews to develop the UCLH as the major centre for cancer and cardiac specialty services for this part of London. However, we are not persuaded that renal transplantation work should move from the Royal Free hospital.

As UCLH has itself made clear, its continuing ability to provide high quality patient care and achieve economies will be enhanced by consolidating its services into fewer buildings. I await its detailed proposals for doing so. In the meantime, transitional funding will be available, against an agreed programme of change.

"Making London Better" made clear the need to develop the Homerton Hospital to improve local acute services for the people of Hackney. To achieve this, we will undertake a major redevelopment of the Homerton over the next five years, at an estimated cost of around £25 million subject to formal appraisal.

As part of the Homerton development we will speed up the expansion and improvement of the hospital's accident and emergency department, and the in-patient facilities that support it. This work is in addition to improvements to local primary care facilities which, among other things, will help relieve pressure on local accident and emergency services.

The Royal London Hospital in Whitechapel is already the main accident and emergency centre in East London. It has seen substantial investment recently in the accident and emergency department. We intend to add to this by completing a new 28-bed admissions ward adjacent to the A and E department.

In the light of the improvements to A and E services at the Homerton and the Royal London, our firm commitment to retaining the A and E at UCLH, and new projects to improve local primary care, I have decided that it is both safe and sensible to close the small accident and emergency department at the Smithfield site.

Expert professional advice is that the needs of local residents, and those who work in the City during the day, can be properly met by the alternative services we will be providing. I am also announcing today new investment in the London ambulance service which will enable it to put new emergency vehicles on the road and further improve the service it provides.

Almost half of the patients attending the A and E department at St. Bartholomew's have relatively minor injuries or conditions which do not need to be treated in an accident and emergency department. Their needs will be met by a new national health service facility at St. Bartholomew's specially geared to treating minor injuries and conditions. I welcome the interest the City has shown in this proposal and we will be exploring what positive and practical contribution they can make to its development. In addition, a permanent ambulance base, staffed by paramedics, will be located at Smithfield.

The St. Bartholomew's A and E will not close until the additional facilities at the Homerton and the new facility at Smithfield are ready. We anticipate this happening by October 1994.

The decisions I have announced today are consistent with the long term strategy being developed by the Royal London/St. Bartholomew's/London Chest project team for a phased concentration of services at Whitechapel. This offers the greatest potential for improving patient care.

Detailed proposals for the first phase of the development of the Whitechapel site will come forward shortly. A number of specialist patient services, including cancer, will be retained at Smithfield for some years to come. Medical research and education will continue at Charterhouse square.

Family Guidance Clinics

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many child and family guidance clinics were in existence in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992."

Mr. Sackville: Gross expenditure at 1992-93 prices, as measured by movements in the gross domestic product, for the financial years 1990-91 to 1993-94 for executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by the Department of Health is shown in the table. Planned expenditure for the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, Medical Practices Committee and Standing Committee on Post Graduate Medical Education in 1994-95 (at 1992-93 prices) is also shown in the table. Allocations for 1994-95 for the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, National Biological Standards Board, National Radiological Protection Board and Public Health Laboratory Service Board have yet to be agreed. Allocations for 1995-96 will be decided after the 1994 Public Expenditure Survey.

[3] Not available.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department sponsors nine executive non-departmental public bodies as listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies", copies of which are available in the Library.

Appointments to the National Biological Standards board, the Public Health Laboratory Service Board and the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting are made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Appointments to both the National Radiological Protection Board and the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State after consultation with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health makes all the appointments to the Medical Practices Committee except one member who is appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health makes all the appointments to the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority and also appoints members on behalf of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Forty per cent. of the members of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting are elected from the professions and 20 per cent. are directly appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State who also formally appoints elected members. The body has a president, not a chairman, who is elected by the members from amongst their own number.

The chairman and members of the Standing Committee on Postgraduate Medical Education are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State after consultation and on the recommendation of the Chief Medical Officer.

Community Care Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each local authority what the indicative allocation of social security transfer reviews of social community care grants for 1993-94 would have been if the formula being applied for the composition and distribution of the grant in 1994-95 had previously been applied; and if she will indicate (a) the actual increase or decrease in overall funding to each authority that would have occurred, (b) the impact upon grant per pensioner, (c) the impact upon grant per over-75 and (d) the overall ranking in terms of grant per pensioner.

Mr. Bowis: The information will be placed in the Library.

Electoral Register

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales, together in each case with the equivalent year's registration figures.

Mr. Sackville: The Registrar General's mid-1992 estimates of residents aged 17 years and over plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years in each local authority area of England and Wales have been compared with roughly corresponding 1993 electorate figures and copies will be placed in the Library. There are no similar population estimates for parliamentary constituencies.

EC Health Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Health Council of 13 December indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Council adopted resolutions on future guidelines for the "Europe against Cancer" programme and on the extension to the end of 1994 of actions under the "Europe against AIDS" programme. It agreed conclusions on blood self-sufficiency and on setting up an epidemiological network in the Community, and a declaration on European drug prevention week. The Commission presented its Communication on the framework for action in the field of public health, detailed discussion of which is expected at the next Council meeting, under the Greek Presidency. The Council referred back for further consideration by the Committee of Permanent Representatives the subject of reducing tobacco consumption, specifically the Commission's amended proposal for a directive on the approximation of laws on advertising for tobacco products. No formal votes were taken.

Health Service Executives

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the salaries of the chief executives of (a) Warrington Hospital Trust, (b) Warrington Community national health service trust and (c) North Cheshire area health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Asthma

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to promote compliance with the British Thoracic Society's guidelines on the treatment and care of asthma sufferers.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service management executive is considering how it can best promote the use of professionally developed clinical guidelines, such as those of the British Thoracic Society, to improve services to patients.

The NHS management executive recognises the importance of improving the services for people with asthma. It has recently introduced a specific payment for general practitioners who organise chronic disease management programmes for the care of patients with asthma which we expect will result in many more GPs using these guidelines. Ninety per cent. of GPs have been approved for this initiative.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards exist to monitor the quality of domiciliary care purchased privately by elderly or disabled persons.

Mr. Bowis: Reputable agencies are developing codes of practice to ensure that the quality of care they provide is satisfactory. Local authorities who purchase domiciliary care services are able to incorporate quality standards and assurances in their contracts with providers and to monitor compliance. A number of authorities are also inspecting, on a voluntary basis, other independent providers.

The social services inspectorate has recently produced a report "Developing Quality Standards for Home Support Services", which has been sent to all social services authorities and made available to independent providers. In due course more detailed guidance on standards is to be produced after further consultations with interested groups. Copies of the report are available in the Library.

Waiting Times

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of patients are seen and assessed for treatment within five minutes of arriving in accident and emergency departments;

(2) how many patients are not admitted within a month of their second cancelled operation;

(3) what percentage of patients are seen within 30 minutes of their out-patient appointment time.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the quarter ending 30 September 1993, 80 per cent. (estimated based on samples) of patients attending accident and emergency departments were assessed immediately, only 117 patients failed to be admitted to hospital within one month of their second cancelled operation (most health authorities met this standard in full) and 78 per cent. (estimated based on samples) of patients were seen within 30 minutes of their specified appointment time in out-patient clinics.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of elective episodes, waiting list and booked, by specialty, do not require an overnight stay.

Mr. Sackville: In the first six months of 1993-94 national health service hospitals treated some 47 per cent. of elective episodes in the general and acute sector as day cases. The percentages by specialty are not yet available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of NHS patients, by specialty, are admitted within (a) three months and (b) 12 months of being put on a waiting list.

Dr. Mawhinney: The data are shown in the table. The latest year for which figures are available is 1989-90. The figures show, for patients who were admitted, the percentage of those who had been on the waiting list for up to three months, and up to 12 months (including those up to three months).

ENVIRONMENT

Beaches

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the beaches to be monitored by the National Rivers Authority for pollution levels in 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Yeo: Bathing waters, within the scope of the bathing water directive, which were monitored by the National Rivers Authority in 1993-94 are listed in the Department's News Release No. 818. Copies have been placed in the Library. The same waters and any additional waters identified as within the scope of the directive will be monitored next year. Information on the monitoring of waters outside the scope of the directive is available from the NRA.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environmental, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 497, when in 1994 he expects the extension to Beckton will open; how long the delays in start up have been to date; what penalties Alcatel has incurred for late delivery of operating software; and whether the service will also operate in evenings and at weekends.

Mr. Baldry: The opening of the extension of the docklands light railway to Beckton will take place next March. The original completion date for the extension was the end of 1992; that date was revised to October 1993 when the docklands light railway appointed a prime contractor to take overall responsibility for delivering the Beckton extension and for the switchover of the existing railway to the new SELTRAC automatic train control system manufactured by Alcatel. The prime contractor is paid once the extension is fully tested and proven reliable. Alcatel is now liable to substantial liquidated damages for each week's delay in delivering the automatic train control system. Next year docklands light railway intends to return to a full-time schedule similar to that of London Underground, with trains running at evenings and weekends across its network.

Prompt Payment Policy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress had been made on implementing the Government's prompt payment policy in the construction industry;

(2) what advice he gives to specialist sub-contractors when experiencing payment delays on securing implementation of the Government's policy on prompt payment;

(3) when he will be able to implement the prompt payment clauses in Government construction contracts following the issue of guidelines to Government Departments in July.

Mr. Baldry: Government Departments are implementing the policy on prompt payment announced in 1992. My Department has already undertaken a first stage of consultation with the construction industry on the further advice to be given to Departments on incorporation of more specific prompt payment clauses than those currently used in Government works and construction contracts. Our intention is to provide model amendments to standard forms of contract which will give sub-contractors a right to prompt payment by the main contractor, enforceable through the courts. In the light of comments from industry organisations, our proposals are being revised and a further set will be issued for consultation shortly.

Sprinkler Systems

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to make the installation of sprinkler systems compulsory in newly constructed homes.

Mr. Baldry: There are no plans at present to make the installation of sprinkler systems compulsory in newly constructed houses in England or Wales, although this will be kept under review.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities in County Durham requested that he direct the Local Government Commission to conduct a further review in accordance with the revised guidelines both before and after the publication of the Commission's final report.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 3 December, Official Report, column 761.

Commercial Leaseholds

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to the consultation paper on commercial leaseholds; and if he will list the people or organisations concerned.

Mr. Baldry: I have placed in the Library of the House a list of 246 individuals or organisations who have responded to the consultation. A further 13 respondents have asked that their replies remain confidential.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors in relation to dispute resolution procedures for commercial leasehold valuations.

Mr. Baldry: My Department held discussions with the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors before issuing our consultation paper on commercial property leases on 27 May 1993. The paper discusses arrangements for dispute resolution procedures, among other issues. The Institution has responded to the paper; we are paying careful attention to its views, as well as to those of the many other respondents.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the results of his consultations on commercial leaseholders.

Mr. Baldry: We hope to make an announcement before Easter.

National Sustainability Strategy

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the national sustainability strategy will include a national coastal strategy to integrate wildlife, land claim, marina developments, fisheries and recreation; and if the biodiversity national plan will include targets to protect threatened flora and farms in the coastal zone.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's proposals for managing the coast and the control of development below the low water mark were set out in the consultation documents issued on 18 October 1993; the responses are under consideration. A sustainable development strategy and the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan will be published in January, after the House returns.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the national sustainability strategy will help to protect the threatened wildlife of lowland raised bogs.

Mr. Yeo: The sustainable development strategy will contain a section on wildlife and habitats but the main strategy and programmes for the conservation of species and habitats will be explained in the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan. Both the sustainable development strategy and the biodiversity action plan are due to be published after the House returns in January.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures will be included in the United Kingdom action plan to safeguard lowland raised bogs;

(2) if the threatened wildlife of lowland raised bogs including the Baltic bog moss, the fen violet, the large heath butterfly and the rosy marsh moth will be listed as priorities in the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan.

Mr. Yeo: A strategy for the conservation and enhancement of biodiversity, including species and habitats will be contained in the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan, which is due to be published after the House returns in January.

Local Government Review

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received calling for the reform of local government in Warwickshire.

Mr. Baldry: Representations are not recorded in this way, so the information could be discovered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Local Government Commission's review of Lancashire to be concluded.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission proposes to submit its final recommendations on the structure of local government in Lancashire to my right hon. Friend by the end of July 1994.

Forests

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, within the newly designated community forest areas, the planting of trees and the provision of public access will be entirely a matter of voluntary agreement between landowners and farmers on the one side and the authorities responsible for the community forests on the other.

Mr. Yeo: Both planting and public access will be voluntary in community forests. We are encouraging landowners to make voluntary agreements on new access arrangements through the community woodland supplement which is part of the woodland grant scheme.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the designation of community forest areas confers a more restrictive planning designation upon those areas than existed before.

Mr. Yeo: No. Local planning authority decisions on individual planning decisions must take account of the development plan, national policy guidance and other material considerations. Applications must be decided in accordance with the development plan, unless material considerations indicate otherwise. Community forest plans should be taken into account in the preparation of development plans.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring regulations he has introduced in relation to the installation of mains-operated smoke detectors in new-built homes.

Mr. Baldry: The current building regulations, which came into effect on 1 June 1992, call for mains-operated smoke detectors in new homes. There are no regulations requiring the monitoring of detectors over the life of the dwelling. The fire research station periodically investigates local authority and fire service experience of domestic detectors, under a research contract with my Department.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what circumstances he takes into consideration in deciding to reverse a decision of the Planning Inspectorate;

(2) how often he has used his powers to overrule a decision reached by the Planning Inspectorate since its inception as an executive agency.

Mr. Baldry: I assume the question relates to planning appeal cases recovered for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment's own decision, where the inspectorate's recommendation is not accepted. Each case is decided on its merits, taking into account the available evidence, which includes relevant development plan policies and all other material considerations. The only information available relates to planning appeals involving local public inquiries. In 1992-93, nine of the 166 decisions issued by my right hon. Friend in respect of such cases were contrary to inspectors' recommendations. Between April and September 1993, four of the 66 appeal decisions issued by my right hon. Friend fell into this category.

Habitats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary State for the Environment what plans he has to protect those areas of the sea that are important for wildlife under the Habitats and Species directive.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's plans for implementation of the EC habitats directive were set out in their public consultation paper issued on 4 October 1993, a copy of which is in the House library. The document includes proposals for conservation of marine areas which will be selected under the directive.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to make the proposals for implementation of the new Habitats directive complement the Government's biodiversity action plan and national sustainability strategy.

Mr. Yeo: Yes.

Housing Association

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: The position for an individual housing association depends on the particular form of its constitution. For associations which are charities, the position on appointments is determined by the terms of their trusts or governing instruments. For associations which are constituted as industrial and provident societies, appointments may be made by election at an annual general meeting. The Housing Corporation, as part of its statutory function of supervising the performance of registered housing associations, monitors the membership of its management committees and expects them to have an appropriate range of skills and experience.

European Environmental Bureau

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 497, if he will make a statement on his meeting with United Kingdom members of the European Environmental Bureau held on 6 December.

Mr. Yeo: I met United Kingdom representatives of the EEB on 6 December. We discussed the outcome of the Environment Council held on 2 and 3 December and other issues including the European Environment Agency, the fifth action programme, enlargement and subsidiarity.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will clarify the powers of local authorities to borrow by the issue of stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I am aware that some local authorities are contemplating borrowing by the issue of stock. I am also aware that authorities' powers to borrow in this way are not considered clear. The Government have no objection to the issue of stock by authorities. My right hon. Friend has therefore today given an approval, with the consent of the Treasury, to this form of borrowing. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has issued a similar approval today in respect of local authorities in Wales.

It remains the Government's policy that the great majority of local authorities' requirements for borrowing should be met by the Public Works Loan Board.

Council Tax

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many proposals to amend the council tax valuation list have been made in the current year; and how many have already been settled.

Mr. Curry: As at 30 November 1993, 860,305 proposals for the alteration of the valuation list in England had been received by the Valuation Office Agency. This represents 4·28 per cent. of the total number of dwellings in the valuation lists. Of these, 146,400 had already been settled. My Department is considering the arrangements for dealing with outstanding appeals with the agency and representatives of the valuation tribunal service.

Housing Management

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to amend the implementation timetable for introducing compulsory competitive tendering for housing management in the light of his decision to accelerate the programme for reviewing the structure of English counties and districts.

Sir George Young: I have given careful consideration to the timetable for implementing compulsory competitive tendering for housing management in the light of the acceleration of the programme for reviewing the structure of counties and districts in England. I consider that a distinction can be drawn between housing management, as a front-line, locally delivered service and other white-collar services when considering the implementation timetable. The preparatory work for CCT for housing management and supporting white-collar services will not be wasted if an authority is subsequently reorganised and will stand authorities and tenants in good stead. Housing managers are already making good progress in preparing for CCT. I am keen that they should press ahead as soon as possible.

I recognise, however, that new authorities will need some additional time to complete the competition process. The arrangements for temporary exemptions from CCT for authorities being restructured as a result of the review, announced on 29 March 1993, Official Report, column 56, for white-collar services generally, will therefore continue to apply to housing management. These will allow authorities 18 months following reorganisation to complete the first round of competitive tendering.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has today made a separate announcement about CCT for other white-collar services and for manual services already subject to CCT.

Officials will write to the secretaries of the Association of District Councils and the Association of County Councils with further details of the arrangements which my hon. Friend and I have announced today. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Legal Services

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for extending compulsory competitive tendering to local authority legal services.

Mr. Baldry: On 10 November 1992 my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for the Environment announced to the House the Government's decisions on proposals to extend compulsory competitive tendering to local authority white-collar corporate and professional services, including legal services, Official Report, column 744. He undertook that the Government would discuss details of implementing these decisions with representatives of local government and other interested parties.

Since then, my officials have had very useful discussions with the local authority associations, the Audit Commission and CIPFA in several joint working groups. Following this we are today issuing a consultation document inviting comments on detailed proposals for extending CCT to local authority legal services. Early next year, we intend to consult on detailed proposals for CCT for construction-related services—that is, architecture, engineering and property management—followed by IT, finance, personnel and corporate and administrative services.

The consultation document, copies of which I will place in the Library, includes a definition of legal services, indicates how much legal work authorities will be required to subject to CCT and gives details of modifications which we intend to make to the statutory framework for competitive tendering to ensure that authorities will continue to be able to deliver services in a way which meets their own objectives and local peoples' aspirations.

We propose that local authorities be permitted to carry out up to 55 per cent., by value, of all legal work using their own staff without going through competition, subject to smaller authorities being able to retain a minimum of £300,000 worth of work. This recognises that certain work must be retained in-house both to enable an authority to fulfil its democratic responsibilities and to act as an intelligent client for bought in services.

An authority will not be able to award any of the remaining 45 per cent. of work to their own staff unless they have won it in fair and open competition. Experience with the manual services already subject to CCT has shown that competition bring not only financial savings, but also significant improvements in the management, efficiency and quality of public services. I have no reason to doubt that it will bring the same benefits for legal and other white-collar work.

Following consideration of comments received on the proposals included in this consultation document, I will submit to the House the statutory instruments required under the Local Government Act 1988 to give effect to our proposals. I anticipate CCT will take effect from 1 October 1995 in metropolitan districts and in London.

In shire counties and districts which are subject to review by the Local Government Commission, the implementation timetable for legal and other white-collar services requires some modification to reflect the acceleration of the Commission's review programme announced recently.

Our objective is that authorities should, wherever possible, continue to subject services to the pressures of competition which can bring so many benefits. We also hope to see the same benefits realised for corporate and construction-related services as soon as possible.

An authority's approach to organising these services is determined by the way in which its front-line services are delivered. We would not wish to see new authorities tied to inappropriate arrangements made by their predecessors and I have therefore concluded we should not require authorities to implement CCT for their core white-collar functions when a reorganisation is expected in their area.

I have concluded that the CCT timetable should be modified so that no county or district, or their successor authorities, will be required to implement competition for the new services before reorganisation has taken place in their area, or the decision has been taken that they will remain unchanged. New services will be introduced to the regime in a phased programme thereafter.

This timeable will apply to all new authorities which come into being in April 1995 or April 1996 and to any areas where there is to be no change from the existing two-tier structure. Authorities reorganised at a later date will continue to benefit from the exemptions already announced.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction has today made a separate announcement about the implementation timetable for CCT for housing management services.

My officials will write to the secretaries of the Association of County Councils and Association of District Councils giving further details of these modifications. I will place a copy of that letter in the Library.

Energy Efficiency Committee

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Energy Efficiency Committee was created; how many times it has met; what issues were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 14 December 1993]: An interdepartmental energy efficiency steering group at senior official level was set up earlier this year and has met twice since then. It reviews progress on the Government estate 15 per cent. energy efficiency target at a strategic level.

Disabled People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to surcharge employers who do not employ a minimum percentage of registered disabled and to provide funds to employers employing above the minimum percentage of registered disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce such a system. The idea of a levy on employers who do not meet a requirement to employ a quota of disabled persons, with the money raised being used for schemes of assistance to people with disabilities, was one of a number of legislative alternatives to the quota scheme discussed in the consultative document published by the Department in 1990, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities". Responses to the consultative document on these issues were inconclusive and following that exercise we decided to retain the quota but keep the position under review. That remains the situation.

UB40 Card

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider, when the job seeker's allowance is introduced in April 1996, amending the UB40 card used by employment benefit claimants for identification purposes to incorporate a photograph.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The UB40/UBL18 booklet "Helping You Back to Work: Information for Clients" is issued to new clients when they make a claim to unemployment benefits and is not primarily a means of identifying a client. It is a source of information to clients on their obligations and entitlements.

We are, however, aware of issues around the identification of clients and the employment service is considering ways in which they can improve the safeguards they provide to clients about the confidentiality of the information they provide them with, and reduce the possibilty of mistaken identity and wrong or inaccurate payments.

Graduate Employment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many graduates were unable to secure employment by the end of 1992 for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each standard region.

Miss Widdecombe: Surveys co-ordinated out by the central services unit on behalf of the higher education institutions show that out of a total of 148,037 people who graduated with first degrees in 1992, 16,763 were unemployed at the end of the year. Figures by standard region are not available.

European Social Fund

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to include homeless people as a specific group for application of the European social fund in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The primary purpose of the European social fund (ESF) is to help unemployed people back to work through vocational training and guidance and other labour market measures. Unemployed people who are also homeless may therefore benefit from ESF support, but there are no plans for a special priority category for them.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing, in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures set out in the following table show in 1992-93 prices the Employment Department's spend from 1990-91 to 1992-93 and published expenditure plans for 1993-94 to 1995-96 in respect of the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department, as listed in Public Bodies 1992.

Details of any revisions to planned expenditure for 1994-95 and 1995-96 following the Financial Statement and Budget Report will be published in the departmental report in spring 1994.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those responsbile for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for appointing the chairmen and members of all the boards of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Employment Department.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to training and enterprise councils.

Miss Widdecombe: Eligibility for training and enterprise council (TEC) board directors is set by the TEC operating agreement. TECs are private companies. The board is appointed in accordance with company law by the members of the TEC. The chairman is elected from the board.

DEFENCE

Police Study

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Sir John Blelloch and his team will begin their study of the Ministry of Defence police; and when the team is due to report.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence study team, comprising Sir John Blelloch and three other members, began work on 1 December this year with the principal aim of reviewing the future role, aims, objectives, structure and pay of the Ministry of Defence police. The team has been requested to present its report to the Chairman of the Ministry of Defence police committee by 1 June 1994. The study was commissioned before the major study of defence costs, announced on 1 December. Sir John's work will be of relevance to the wider study and he will be making his findings available to the Ministry of Defence as his review proceeds.

RAF Support and Maintenance Tasks

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for RAF support and maintenance tasks.

Mr. Hanley: Work continues to be undertaken in the support area to ensure the appropriate balance is maintained with the front line and that tasks are undertaken in the most cost-effective manner. The maintenance group element of RAF support command became a defence agency (MGDA) on 1 April 1991 as part of that process. We are now starting an overall review of the MGDA, to evaluate the agency's past performance and look at options for the future, including abolition, privatisation and contractorisation, in whole or in part, in addition to maintaining the status quo. The review will include representatives from the OPSS and the Treasury as well as outside consultants. It will take full accoount of the findings of the feasibility study currently under way into the scope for market testing at RAF Sealand. The trade unions have been informed about the review, which is to be completed by 30 June 1994. A copy of the terms of reference of the review has been placed in the Library of the House.

In the meantime, we have been looking at the potential for undertaking specific support and maintenance tasks more efficiently and cost-effectively in the light of the changing requirement.

A study has been completed into the equipment supply depots located at RAF Carlisle, RAF Quedgeley (near Gloucester) and RAF Stafford. There is already excess storage capacity overall at these depots and this will increase as our requirement to hold spares decreases. Our studies have concluded that significant savings of some £85 million over 10 years could be achieved by concentrating technical storage at RAF Stafford, which would mean the closure of RAF Carlisle by 31 March 1997 and the progressive run-down and closure of RAF Quedgeley by 31 March 1998 at the latest. Formal consultation with the Trades Unions and other interested parties will now begin and final decisions will be taken in the light of representations made.

A further study has been completed into the avionics communications-electronics servicing and maintenance depots. This has concluded that appreciable savings could be achieved by transferring the engineering and maintenance tasks currently undertaken at RAF North Luffenham to RAF Sealand. RAF North Luffenham would close by 1 October 1996. I propose to accept this recommendation as the basis for informal consultation with the Trades Unions and other interested parties, subject to any more cost-effective solution than RAF Sealand being identified by the MGDA review.

I am placing a copy of both consultation documents in the Library of the House.

Submarine Operations

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the subfacts scheme for providing fishermen with advance notice of dived submarine operations will be extended to cover the Minches and the Sea of Hebrides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The extension of SUBFACTS into the Minches and Sea of Hebrides will take place on 10 January 1994. On the same date there will be changes in the arrangements for broadcasting SUBFACTS information in the northern parts of the Irish sea and in waters to the west of Scotland. British Telecom marine radio service will transmit SUBFACTS information six times a day, on both VHF and MF, for the entire Clyde subordinate sea area, from Cape Wrath to the Calf of Man. In addition, the Clyde Coastguard will transmit SUBFACTS information six times a day over the Inner Clyde exercise areas, out to a line extending from the Mull of Kintyre to Corsewall Point. Throughout the Clyde subordinate sea area, fishermen will at any time be able to obtain SUBFACTS information on request from HM Coastguard. These revised broadcasting arrangements have been worked out in consultation with the fishing industry safety group, and will be reviewed by the group after 12 months.

Following the extension of SUBFACTS into the Plymouth and Portland exercise areas earlier this year, this latest extension of SUBFACTS meets the Government's commitment to operate the scheme in all regularly used submarine exercise areas around the coast of the United Kingdom. Together with the operational procedures set out in the code of practice for submarines which was published in October, it represents an important step forward in maritime safety and will help to minimise the risk of any further incidents between dived submarines and fishing vessels.

Support Costs

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the areas which will be examined with a view to reducing support costs in preparation for the study entitled "Front Line First".

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 7 December at column 176.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how he exercised his controlling share holding in International Military Services Ltd.; and how often he asked for, or was given, reports on the activities of this company;

(2) how he, or his predecessors, exercised their shareholding in International Military Services Ltd.; and what reports of its activities were asked for, or given.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend and his predecessors have exercised their controlling shareholding in International Military Services Ltd. in the normal commercial way by attending, or being represented at, the annual general meeting of the Company. To facilitate this they have been provided with the statutory consolidated financial statements.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. Hanley: Five vehicles, including a reserve vehicle for the Secretary of State, were provided for Defence Department Ministers in 1990-91 at a cost to the defence budget of some £4,200,000.

Emergency Landings, Newcastle Airport

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, aircraft types and nature of the emergency for all emergency or precautionary landings by military aircraft at Newcastle airport during 1992; and which of those aircraft were armed with live weapons.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, aircraft types and circumstances of all (a) Army and (b) Royal Navy helicopter major accidents in 1987.

Mr. Hanley: The information for all aircraft types is as follows:

Date	Aircraft	Accident
24 February 1987	Sea King (RN)	Falmouth Bay. Cause not determined.
18 March 1987	Lynx (A)	Germany. Six minutes into sortie the rotor gear box seized.
16 July 1987	Gazelle (A)	Canada. During unauthorised manoeuvre the tail struck the ground breaking off the tail boom. A crewman on the ground was fatally injured.
23 September 1987	Sea King (RN)	Culdrose. Tail rotor failure during final approach. Crashed on runway.
15 October 1987	Sea Harrier (RN)	North West coast of Scotland. Aircraft suffered birdstrike during low level sortie.
16 October 1987	Wessex (RN)	Cornwall. Engine failure during winching exercise.
23 October 1987	Gazelle (A)	Middle Wallop. During sloping ground practice, the aircraft slid backwards causing the port skid to dig into the ground.
25 November 1987	Gazelle (RN)	Predannack. Loss of yaw control during turn.

Jaguar Incident, Solway Firth

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the military aircraft accident summary on the accident to a Royal Air Force Jaguar in the Solway firth on 12 September 1990 was released.

Mr. Hanley: On 21 October 1992.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what altitude the accident aircraft's leader was flying at the time of the crash of a Royal Air Force Jaguar in the Solway firth on 12 September 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The aircraft was slightly above 250 ft.

Low flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the outcome of the Royal Air Force inspectorate of flight safety's review in 1990 of the potential safety benefits, in respect of bird strike hazards, of introducing speed limits on fast jets operating at low level.

Mr. Hanley: The outcome of the RAF inspectorate of flight safety's review was that speeds during low-level flight should be constrained to that required to achieve the objective of each low-level sortie. No specified limits were either recommended or imposed. In practice, the speed of aircraft operating in the United Kingdom low flying system (UKLFS) is regulated in order to limit noise disturbance to those on the ground. The normal maximum cruising speed overland in the UKLFS is 450 knots.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to restricting low flying during peak bird migration months.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom Military Low Flying Handbook contains seasonal information on areas of high bird concentration, and some specific locations are granted permanent or seasonal avoidances. My Department is conscious of the need to keep low-flying military aircraft clear of such concentrations and measures to achieve this are kept under continuous review.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the minimum weather requirements for low-level flight at night by fast jet aircraft not equipped with terrain-following radar or electro-optical navigation equipment.

Mr. Hanley: The minimum weather requirements for low level flight at night by fast jet aircraft not equipped with terrain following radar or electro-optical navigational equipment are the normal visual flight rules for fast jets operating in the United Kingdom low flying system, namely: flight visibility of five kilometres, and 1,500 metres horizontal and 500 feet vertical separation from cloud.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the reason for the increase in the minimum authorised altitude for night low flying over the United Kingdom by US Air Force F111 aircraft from October 1992, from 400 to 1,000 ft.

Mr. Hanley: The decision to increase to 1,000 ft the authorised minimum altitude for USAF F111 aircraft flying at night in the United Kingdom was taken by the USAF in the light of a reassessment of the training needs of the aircrew concerned.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current minimum authorised altitude for Royal Air Force Tornado aircraft conducting terrain following radar flight in daylight visual meteorological conditions in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Hanley: It is 300 ft.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the requests made to his Department for authorisation of low-level jet flying between the hours of 2300 and 0700 since 1988, listing in each case the date of the request, the unit submitting the request, the nature of the flying for which authorisation was sought, and his Department's response to the request.

Mr. Hanley: Such requests and the responses to them are held on departmental files but separate records are not kept. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It is most unlikely however, that such training would have been authorised other than in a very small number of exceptional cases.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what methods are used by military aircrew to ensure accurate adherence to minimum authorised altitudes during low flying in aircraft not equipped with radar altimeters.

Mr. Hanley: Those training aircraft which are not equipped with radar altimeters make use of the barometric altimeter, which indicates the altitude of the aircraft above mean sea level. From the initial stages of flying training students are taught to recognise and maintain their minimum authorised height above the ground; they will also spend a greater proportion of their time at higher than their authorised minimum levels until they graduate to squadron service.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of the low flying avoidance area around Milford Haven.

Mr. Hanley: It is not my Department's practice to release specific details of the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the fast jet types which are authorised to conduct night low flying in the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. Hanley: The fast jet types normally authorised to operate in the United Kingdom night low flying system are: Buccaneer, Canberra, F-15, Harrier, Jaguar and Tornado.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sources of information are made available to military pilots on the location and timing of activities on the ground involving gatherings of large numbers of people, to enable them to observe the regulations concerning overflight of such activities; and what definition of large number of people is used in applying these regulations.

Mr. Hanley: Temporary avoidances of gatherings of large numbers of people are promulgated by notices to airmen. In this context, a large number of people is defined as 10,000 although temporary avoidances are frequently arranged for events involving significantly fewer people.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distance from the shore of the United Kingdom beyond which military aircraft operating at less than 2,000ft are not required to book into the low flying system.

Mr. Hanley: Aircraft are not required to book into the United Kingdom low flying system if the low flying element of a sortie takes place over the sea more than three nautical miles from the coastline (half a nautical mile in the case of helicopters and light fixed wing aircraft).

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the planned route of the United States Air Force F-111 aircraft involved in the aircraft proximity hazard incidents at Plymouth airport on 15 October 1992 and 21 October 1992 was a fixed low flying route in use by the unit concerned; and what changes were made to the route following these incidents.

Mr. Hanley: The aircraft involved in the two incidents were operating on a standard route. Both RAF and United States air force air crew use standard routes as little as possible which are in any case replaced at regular intervals.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sorties are conducted for each student on the Royal Air Force advanced flying training courses at RAF Chivenor and RAF Valley, in which the student is required to navigate at low level to a set of turning points whose locations are not known until after the student boards the aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: There are two distinct types of exercises which are flown by students.

Handling exercises (in which the student can either fly as a singleton or as part of a formation) are not flown to a pre-planned route, but are dependent on weather conditions, terrain, distance from base and possible flying restrictions. Suitable general areas for flying would however be decided upon before such exercises commenced. A student would fly a total of six sorties of this type.

Navigation exercises (again either as a singleton or as part of a formation) are generally flown to a pre-planned set route. During such exercises however students are required to deviate from the planned route to practice self-navigation to a prominent point or to simulate unexpected weather avoidance or a change of tactical planning. On these occasions particular emphasis is placed on avoiding restricted or built-up areas. Students would fly a total of 13 singleton sorties, whilst 11 would be flown as part of a formation.

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to authorise the reduction of the minimum altitude at which Royal Air Force Tornado aircraft are permitted to fly on automatic terrain following radar in inclement meteorological conditions to less than 500 ft.

Mr. Hanley: The restrictions placed on low flying training are kept under review.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the eastward directional flow control for low-flying aircrew was introduced in the Clywd valley north of Denbigh.

Mr. Hanley: On 10 August 1992.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Harrier pilots trained at the US Marine Corps air station at Yuma, Arizona, retain their qualification to fly at 200 ft at night following completion of the training course.

Mr. Hanley: Any low level qualification gained as part of the overall training at Yuma will last for 90 days. Pilots who do not fly a night sortie in that period have to fly two simulator sorties plus two night time low level sorties to regain their night time low level currency. The minimum height at which Harrier GR7 aircraft would be authorised to fly at night in the United Kingdom would be 250 ft.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regulations are contained in the group air staff orders of No. 1 RAF Strike Command, which supplement the instructions in the UK military low-flying handbook concerning use of the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Hanley: Headquarters No. 1 group's air staff orders contain regulations governing low flying which are specific to aircraft of that group and which amplify the regulations set out in the United Kingdom military low flying handbook.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been received from foreign air forces since 1990 for permission to fly at less than 250 ft over the United Kingdom; and what response was given to each request.

Mr. Hanley: A request was received for a small number of USAF aircrew based in the United Kingdom to be permitted to carry out a limited amount of Operational Low Flying training in the Welsh tactical training area during December 1990 in preparation for deployment to the Gulf. The request was approved but, in the event, no such training took place. No further requests have been received from foreign air forces since that time.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of complaints about low flying in 1992 were withdrawn after the complainant had been interviewed by RAF Provost and Security Service investigators.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the hon. Member might wish to know that only a very small number of complaints are withdrawn, although a significantly greater number are not pursued further, at the instigation of the complainant, in the light of information provided during the interview with the RAF Provost and security service investigator.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average time taken by Secretariat (Air Staff) 2b to send initial responses to public complaints about low flying in each year since 1985; and what is the current target for the timeliness of such responses.

Mr. Hanley: Such statistics are not maintained and the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In line with the provisions of the citizens charter, the air staff secretariat introduced in July 1991 a target time of four weeks for initial response to complaints from members of the public about low flying. This target has been met in all but exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions are placed on the types and locations of simulated targets for mock attacks by Harrier GR7 aircraft during night low-level electro-optical sorties.

Mr. Hanley: The restrictions placed on types and locations of simulated targets for mock attacks by Harrier GR7 aircraft during night low level sorties are the same as those which apply to sorties flown during the day. Targets are carefully selected and account is taken of the location of nearby habitation and the environmental and safety factors involved.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the standing instructions to RAF Provost and Security Service flying complaints flight personnel concerning the aims and conduct of their interviews with complainants about low flying.

Mr. Hanley: The documents requested are either classified or protected by a privacy marking and cannot be released.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average time taken from receipt of the complaint by his Department to the final response to the complainant for all complaints about low flying which resulted in a full investigation of the circumstances, in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: Such statistics are not maintained and the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to devolve the investigation of low flying complaints to regional units of the RAF Provost and Security Service.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has no such plans.

Aircraft Repair Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost threshold used to determine whether an aircraft damaged in an accident is worth repairing; and if he will list the changes made in that threshold figure since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: There is no cost threshold used to determine whether an aircraft damaged in an accident is worth repairing. The assessment and categorisation of a damaged aircraft, and the subsequent decision to repair it or not, is based on a number of financial, engineering and operational factors which are applied on a case by case basis. These include the unexpired fatigue life of the aircraft concerned, the overall availability and future in-service life of the aircraft type, any special equipment that may be fitted, the costs of materials and manpower, and the availability of funds.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of repairs to military aircraft damaged by bird strikes in each of the last four years.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not recorded separately and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Simulated Attack Targets

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes were made to the measures for monitoring United States 3 Air Force compliance with the provisions of the RAF Strike Command approved list of simulated targets for toss or dive attack, following the report on the accident to an F111 near Lauder on 28 July 1987.

Mr. Hanley: United States air force aircraft based in the United Kingdom are subject to the same regulations governing simulated toss and dive attacks as other military aircraft based here. This situation has not changed since 1987.

WE177 Bomb

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to (a) extend or (b) shorten the service life of the WE177 bomb; and what effect the cancellation of the tactical air-to-surface missile has had on the planned service life of the WE177 bomb.

Mr. Hanley: The announcement that we do not plan in current circumstances to procure a tactical air-to-surface missile does not affect the planned service life of the WE177 bomb.

Tornado Incident, Dalmellington

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the incident in which a Royal Air Force Tornado struck electricity cables near Dalmellington on 26 November 1990 occurred during a run-in between an intitial point and a simulated target; and what was the estimated speed at which the aircraft hit the cable.

Mr. Hanley: The incident occurred before the aircraft had reached the initial point. It was flying at an estimated speed of 435 knots when it struck the cable.

Trident

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the procedures required for co-ordination or targeting, air tasking and airspace deconfliction between naval and air force commands when the substrategic nuclear role is transferred to the Trident system.

Mr. Hanley: These factors have been taken fully into account.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the requirement for visible deployments of Trident submarines to foreign ports in order to demonstrate credibility and commitment in the substrategic role.

Mr. Hanley: The credibility of a submarine-launched deterrent has never been judged to rely on visits to foreign ports.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated additional expenditure required on the Trident programme to adapt the weapon to perform the tactical or theatre nuclear roles currently performed by tactical aircraft; and if he will provide a breakdown of the estimated additional expenditure into (a) missile, (b) warhead, including nuclear testing, (c) submarine, (d) command and control systems, (e) shore construction and (f) operating costs.

Mr. Hanley: It is not our practice to provide details of these costs separately. The adaptation of the Trident system to meet our sub-strategic requirements will not require any additional nuclear tests, and the overall additional cost will be small.

"Panorama"

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what opportunities were given to his Department to vet the script of the BBC "Panorama" programme on the Secret Intelligence Service, broadcast on 22 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Government were aware in advance of the contents of the "Panorama" programme on 22 November, but the responsibility for its contents was that of the BBC alone.

Airborne Nuclear Capability

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated saving in the annual budget of the Royal Air Force as a result of the withdrawal of airborne nuclear capability.

Mr. Hanley: The airborne nuclear capability has not been withdrawn.

Flying Hours

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated overall effect on defence expenditure of a reduction of 10 per cent. in the number of hours flown per year by military aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all changes over the past five years in (a) the Supreme Allied Commander Europe-recommended number of flying hours per year and (b) the SACEUR-recommended minimum number of flying hours per year for front-line tactical fighter aircrew.

Mr. Hanley: There have been no such changes in the past five years.

RAF Fast Jet Aircrew

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current total number of combat-ready strike/attack/reconnaissance fast jet aircrew in the Royal Air Force;

(2) what was the turnover rate of combat-ready fast jet strike/attack/reconnaissance aircrew in the Royal Air Force in 1992, expressed as a proportion of the total number of such aircrew.

Mr. Hanley: The turnover rate of combat ready fast jet strike/attack/reconnaissance aircrew in the Royal Air Force in Financial Year 1992-93, expressed as a proportion of the total number of such aircrew (505), was 26 per cent. Personnel left the strike/attack/reconnaissance force on promotion, for training for another role or on leaving the Service. Replacement aircrew were trained or promoted to replace them.

Controlled Airspace

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the date, location, aircraft involved and circumstances of each of the incidences of unauthorised penetration of controlled and/or restricted airspace since 1987.

Mr. Hanley: This information is classified.

Tornado

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use has been made of the highlands restricted area by Tornado aircraft from (a) the German air force, (b) the German navy and (c) the Italian air force.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has no record of German air force, German navy or Italian air force Tornado aircraft being authorised to use the Highlands restricted area.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the reason for the increase in the minimum authorised height for trinational Tornado training establishment crews in 1991.

Mr. Hanley: The minimum authorised height for tri-national Tornado training establishment crews prior to 1991 was 250 feet for instructors only. This was increased to 500 ft in 1991 following a reassessment of the need for these personnel to operate below this height during their tour at RAF Cottesmore.

Sea King Incident

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the serial number, location and circumstances of the accident to a Royal Navy Sea King on 19 January 1991, listed in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1992, table 3·9; and what are the reasons for the omission of this accident from the list in the answer of 6 May 1993, columns 243-46.

Mr. Hanley: The accident referred to involved a Royal Navy Sea King Mk 4, tail number ZA312, which was operating approximately 29·5nm outside Al Jubayl airfield in Saudi Arabia. The helicopter was preparing to land when the tail rotor blade struck the ground. There were no injuries. An administrative error resulted in the omission of this accident from the list contained in the answer given on 6 May at columns 243-46.

Condor System

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents were reported under the Royal Air Force Condor system in each year since 1979; if he will provide a breakdown of these figures into categories of incident; and what changes have been made to the Condor system since its introduction.

Mr. Hanley: There are no categories of incident under the CONDOR system. As reports submitted under the Condor system are in confidence, long term database records are not maintained. Records available are as follows:

Year	Number of Condor reports
1989	25
1990	22
1991	25
1992	27
1993	[1]21

[1] Up to 9 December 1993.

Since the introduction of the CONDOR system, a confidential telephone answering machine has been added to supplement written submissions.

Defence Service Employees

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is planning to take to ensure alternative employment for former and current employees in the defence service in Wales.

Mr. Hanley: Wherever practicable, employees under notice of redundancy are offered alternative jobs within MOD or other Government Departments in the area. Where this is not possible, the MOD offers up to eight weeks paid leave for job-search and approved re-training, and also provides a counselling and outplacement service which liaises closely with local offices of the employment service and training and enterprise councils (TECs) to help with job-search and vocational training.

The employment service and the TECs also provide a range of programmes and services designed to take account of special local circumstances to help former employees of any industry, including defence, to help them find alternative employment.

Harriers

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which domestic RAF bases will be considered as potential headquarters for the German-based Harriers in the event of their being brought back to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: There are no current plans to return the Harriers based in Germany to the United Kingdom.

RAF Personnel (Commercial Recruitment)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the levels of recruitment of retiring RAF personnel by the commercial air sector, and its implications for the intro-productive service figures for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Hanley: The RAF's personnel planning takes account of many factors, including an assessment of the numbers likely to be lost to the civil air sector. Because of the length of training and the need to make the most efficient and economical use of scarce and expensive training resources however, the RAF does not make large changes to its recruiting and training targets from year to year. The aim is to balance recruitment and outflow to achieve stability in the service.

Harrier Crash (Iraq)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action to date has been taken to retrieve sensitive equipment that was aboard the Harrier aircraft that crashed in the Kurdish region of northern Iraq on 23 November; what was the cause of the accident; if he will send to the hon. Member for Don Valley a copy of the accident report inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The recoverable wreckage from the accident has been transported to Incirlik, Turkey for onward shipment to the UK. The cause of the accident is still under investigation by the RAF board of inquiry. A summary of its findings will be produced in the normal way and a copy will be sent to the hon. Member. Copies will also be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Western European Union Defence Corps

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the development of the Western European Union defence corps.

Mr. Hanley: There is no such formation as the WEU defence corps. The WEU Petersberg declaration of June 1992 announced that military units for WEU missions would be drawn on a case-by-case basis from forces with national and NATO roles. The WEU planning cell in Brussels has been given responsibility for compiling a list of units which could be made available for potential WEU operations. Multinational units which have already been declared available include the European corps, the multinational division (central) and the UK/NL amphibious force.

Nitro-cellulose and Nitro-glycerine

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 289, what production capabilities in the United Kingdom he regards as strategic necessities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The importance of particular production capabilities for defence alters over time. Such matters are kept under review, but we do not categorise particular production capabilities as being essential to maintain at all costs whatever the circumstances.

Racial Discrimination

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 295, what was the nature of the complaint relating to racial discrimination in the Army which has been resolved and how it was resolved.

Mr. Hanley: The complaint in the army involved racial abuse. The matter was investigated under the normal redress of grievance procedures and resolved to the satisfaction of the victim by means of a public apology.

Ammunition

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 292, what commitments he has received from the firms mentioned in his answer relating to the suipply of ammunition in a time of crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: No such commitments are required. Provision of ammunition for a time of crisis is managed by the maintenance of reserve stocks, not by any arrangement with industry, either in the United Kingdom or abroad.

Reserve Forces

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 296, what consideration he has given to deleting the private addresses and service affiliations from the responses he has received to his consultative document on the reserves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Simply to delete the address and signature block would not in all cases serve to prevent the identity of the respondent being established. Moreover, to delete all references to service connections would in many cases reduce the value of the letter by removing the context and background experience against which the comments were made. Rather than publish the letters complete, therefore, I consider it appropriate to release a factual summary of the responses, supported by extracts from the replies.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Hanley: Centrally controlled expenditure by my Department on advertising in the financial year 1979-80 to 1992-93 was as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £ million
1979-80	8·07
1980-81	6·81
1981-82	4·25
1982-83	3·98
1983-84	5·37
1984-85	7·37
1985-86	8·66
1986-87	9·02
1987-88	8·26
1988-89	12·60
1989-90	17·80
1990-91	12·31
1991-92	11·47
1992-93	8·70

It is not possible to provide the details of expenditure on advertising for each of the last 12 months without disproportionate cost. Estimated expenditure for the financial year 1993-94 is, however, £8·78 million.

Hercules C130

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from hon. Members and British industry in support of the Hercules C130 J programme.

Mr. Hanley: We have received a variety of representations from hon. Members and British industry regarding the Hercules rolling replacement programme, including a number supporting the C-130J.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of operating and maintaining the existing C130 K Hercules fleet of transport aircraft in Royal Air Force service including the personnel cost of both the associated air and ground crews.

Mr. Hanley: The average annual operating and maintenance cost (at 1993-94 outturn prices) of the RAF C130 K Hercules fleet (CMk1, CMk3 and CMk1K)) is approximately £140,000,000. This includes personnel costs but excludes depreciation, interest on capital, station and administration costs.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when (a) the first and (b) the last C130 K Hercules aircraft entered squadron service with the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Aitken: The first C130K entered squadron service on 1 August 1967 while the last aircraft entered service in 1970.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what modifications have been made to the C130 K Hercules fleet since it entered service; when these modifications were carried out; and what numbers of aricraft were involved.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 433 modifications has been embodied in the C-130 fleet since its introduction in service. One hundred and five are considered to be significant from both a cost and operational point of view. The most notable of these are as follows:

1972—Introduce W MK2 Met aircraft. One aircraft embodied.
1976—To introduce a new centre wing structure. 100 per cent. fleet embodied.
1976—To introduce reconditioned outer wing. Applied to 95 per cent. of the fleet. Fully embodied.
1979—Convert MK1 to MK3 (15ft extn). Applied to 50 per cent. of the fleet. Fully embodied.
1982—Introduce full modification to enable use as tanker. Applicable to only six aircraft. Fully embodied.

1982—Introduce in-flight refuelling facility. 100 per cent. fleet embodied.

1983—Introduce Station Keeping Equipment. Applied to 34 per cent. of the fleet. Fully embodied.

1985—Introduce flight deck lighting compatible with night vision goggles. Applicable to 10 aircraft for use with technical squadrons. Fully embodied.

1993—Introduce flight deck protective armour. Fitted to three aircraft in response to an Urgent Operational Requirement in support of Operation Cheshire. Fully embodied.

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Hercules rolling replacement programme.

Mr. Aitken: As announced in the Defence White Paper in July, we intend to undertake a rolling programme to replace or refurbish our C-130 Hercules aircraft, starting with about half the fleet by the end of the century. In order to determine whether refurbishment or replacement offers the best value for money we have placed a contract for studies to establish the costs and risk of refurbishment. It has now been decided that we will issue an invitation to Lockheed Aerospace Systems Corporation to tender for the provision of a replacement aircraft. We shall also—as part of the front line first study—be exploring options for greater use of leasing of cargo aircraft, as my right hon. and learned Friend announced to the Defence Committee on 1 December.

The issue of an invitation to tender does not constitute a commitment to purchase any replacement aircraft. It will, however, provide essential data on price from which we can make a valid assessment of all the options. Following comparison of the results of the studies and prices for new aircraft we hope to be in a position to reach a decision by the end of 1994.

Defence Imports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the importing of one battle tank from the Russian Federation as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms.

Mr. Aitken: The tank was imported for defence research and development purposes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what formal or informal approaches Her Majesty's Government have received from Governments of nations with utilities with a contract with British Nuclear Fuels plc for the use of THORP, to cancel or vary the contract or its terms; and what steps have been taken to alert other departments.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Dry Cleaning

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research he has commissioned and what grants he has offered for research on future dry cleaning technology from OTEC (MSG) Ltd.; and if he will place the conclusions of that research in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: OTEC is a subsidiary of Master Services Group—MSG—which leads a project assisted by a Department of Trade and Industry grant under DEMOS—DTI's environmental management options scheme. The grant fo £134,332 over 13 months is in support of the research and development of a hydrocarbon non-halogenated fluid as a possible replacement for CFC 113, a solvent used in the dry-cleaning industry. Production of CFC 113 is to be phased out by 1 January 1995.

A summary of the results of the project will be issued in late 1994 for the benefit of the dry cleaning industry, and will be placed in the Librry of the House.

Solvents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what compliance tests were carried out on European regulations to phase out the use of solvent 113; who conducted these tests; and what alternative solvents or technologies were recommended.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department commissioned consultants Touche Ross to carry out a study into the effect of phase out of CFC 113—solvent 113—in the solvent-using sector. Copies of its report "The use of CFC 113 and 1,1,1 trichloroethane as solvents in UK industry" dated October 1992 were placed in the Library of the House.

My Department has also produced a free leaflet entitled "Ozone Depleting Solvents. CFC Phase Out: Advice on Alternatives and Guidelines for Users", which is also in the Library of the House, and has supported a nationwide series of seminars organised by the Engineering Employers Federation to advise users on the range of alternatives.

Research and Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the spending on research and development in each of the last five years given in 1992-93 prices in his Department.

Mr. Heseltine: The Department of Trade and Industry's expenditure on research and development is recorded in the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development", copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. Table 1.2.3. of the latest edition shows DTI expenditure on research and development from 1987-88, based on 1991-92 prices. Revised figures, based on 1992-93 prices, will be published in the 1994 forward look of science and technology, which replaces the annual review.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects BNFL to publish its accounts for 1992-93; and what reasons it has given for the delay.

Mr. Eggar: BNFL will file its accounts for 1992-93 within the period allowed by the Companies Act 1985, as amended, for laying and delivering accounts. In accordance with section 244 of the Act, BNFL has claimed and been granted a three-month extension to this period on the ground that it is a company which carries on business or has interests outside the United Kingdom, Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. The accounts are now due to be delivered to Companies House on or before 31 January 1994.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the average annual running costs of BNFL plants at (a) Capenhurst, (b) Springfields, (c) Chapelcross, (d) Sellafield and (e) Calderhall.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The following numbers of press notices were issued by the Department for the years requested.

1989	876	Department of Trade and Industry

Year	Number of notices	Department
1990	799	Department of Trade and Industry
1991	724	Department of Trade and Industry
1992	838	Department of Trade and Industry, including Department of Energy from April
1993	745	Department of Trade and Industry, including Department of Energy from April, up to 14 December

Bankruptcies

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have been declared bankrupt each year since 1989, including that year.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Information on company insolvencies is regularly published by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry, in "Business Briefing", copies are available in the Library of the House. The figures concerned were most recently published in the edition dated 5 November.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Eggar: The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running the Department in 1992-93 is £291·2 million. The running costs limit for 1993-94 is £330·6 million. An estimated outturn will be published in the spring in the 1994 departmental report and the unified Budget supplement. The Department's planned running costs expenditure for 1994-95 will be published in the unified Budget supplement.

Electricity Licences

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to relax the conditions of the order which exempts companies from the requirement to hold an electricity generation or supply licence.

Mr. Eggar: Following consultations with the Director General of Electricity Supply, electricity companies and other interested parties, I have decided to amend the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990 to reduce the regulatory burden on small generators, own generators and consumers who sell on a small proportion of the electricity they purchase.

The changes will be made as early as possible in 1994, I expect the changes to be broadly as follows, subject to considering the detailed technical amendments that will be required to achieve our aims.

At present, small generators require a generation licence unless each of their generating stations provides not more than 10 MW, disregarding power going to certain qualifying customers on site. I will extend this exemption to cover generating stations which have a capacity of less than 100 MW and provide more than 10 MW but not more than 50 MW, disregarding power going to certain qualifying customers on site.

At present, a consumer without an electricity supply licence may resell electricity to franchise customers if that electricity was originally purchased from the local public electricity supplier or in certain cases a second tier supplier. I propose to extend the exemption to allow the resale of electricity purchased from a second tier supplier to any franchise customers located on the reseller's site —this subject to overall limits based on the proportion and aggregate amount resold; these are expected to be 10 per cent. and 250 MWH per site respectively. I am also minded to exempt the resale of electricity purchased from an own generator subject to the same conditions and limitations.

The existing exemptions for own generators and deminimis generators allow for the provision of electricity to qualifying groups of companies. I propose to allow more companies to be included in such qualifying groups by reducing the proportion of shares required to be held in a company for it to qualify as a subsidiary forming part of a qualifying group. I am also examining how we might allow certain joint venture companies to be included in a qualifying group. At present, an own generator requires a supply licence unless at least 51 per cent. of the electricity from his generating station goes to qualifying customers located on the own generator's site. I will remove this condition. In future, the proportion of electricity provided to particular customers will not be a factor in determining whether a supply licence is needed.

At present, most generators who are exempt from the need for a generation licence but who have stations over 200 KW capacity must notify the Secretary of State of their name and address. I will remove that requirement.

These changes will encourage own generators and others by reducing the regulatory burden with which they must contend.

In addition, the Director General has granted a full second tier supply licence to Nuclear Electric. This will help to promote competition in the provision of electricity supply contracts to non franchise customers.

The Government recognise the concern that rises in pool prices have caused, particularly to those large users who are on pool related contracts. The Director General of Electricity Supply has investigated the matter. He has carried forward work on the costs and margins of National Power and PowerGen and other relevant issues and has concluded that further steps need to be taken to ensure that customers are protected in future and to allow the satisfactory development of the industry. Discussions with the companies are continuing and he anticipates being able to decide by mid January whether a Monopolies and Mergers Commission reference is required.

In their White Paper "The Prospects for Coal", the Government said that they would consider whether allowing large users to trade outside the electricity pool would be beneficial to the electricity market.

The responses to my Department's consultation paper on dedicated generation established that there were many practical problems to be overcome if a workable dedicated generation scheme were to be found which would not disadvantage other consumers. The Government have concluded that they should not proceed with amendments to the order which would allow an interim scheme to operate within the electricity pool.

I have, therefore, asked the Director General of Electricity Supply to look further into the possibility of trading outside the pool and to report on this by 30 June 1994. He has agreed.

European Economic Area

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the European economic area will enter into force.

Mr. Needham: Following ratification of the European Economic Area—EEA—agreement by all EC member states and participating states of the European Free Trade Association the Community formally concluded the EEA at the ECOFIN Council on 13 December. This means that the European Economic Area will enter into force on 1 January 1994.

The European Economic Area agreement extends most of the EC's single market to five states of the European Free Trade Association: Austria, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden; Liechtenstein may join later. The United Kingdom ratified the EEA on 15 November 1993.

Remote Sensing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for a legal national regime in which remote sensing can be accommodated; and what plans he has to develop an international regime in which the interests of have-not technology states can be accommodated.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 December 1993]: I have no plans to add to the provisions of existing legislation including those of the Outer Space Act 1986. United Nations resolution 41/65 of 3 December 1986 creates an international framework within which the International Committee on Earth Observation Satellites, of which the British National Space Centre is a member, is at present exploring mechanisms for the closer involvement of developing countries.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he has made in preparing for the Government's review of the future prospects for nuclear power in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In their White Paper "The Prospects for Coal", CM 2235, the Government undertook to bring forward work on their review of the future prospects for nuclear power and to make a further announcement later this year.

The Government have received a considerable number of representations about the review from hon. Members, members of the public, the nuclear industry and other interested parties, both on the areas which the review should cover and on the way in which the review should be conducted. In addition, the Trade and Industry Select Committee made recommendations in its report "British Energy Policy and the Market for Coal"—HC 237—earlier this year.

The Government are carefully considering these representations as part of their preparatory work on the review. Some of the issues identified in the context of this work are the extent to which nuclear power is now competitive; the present economics of nuclear power generation; nuclear power's contribution to diversity and security of supply; and environmental aspects of nuclear power.

We will announce the precise terms of reference for the review, and how it will be conducted, as soon as possible.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Commercial Property Law

Mr. Stern: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to bring forward legislation to put into effect the reports announced on 31 March to implement most of the Law Commissioner's recommendations for reforming the law on commercial property leases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Legislation to give effect to the Government's decision to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission's report, "Landlord and Tenant Law: Privity of Contract and Estate"—Law Com. No. 174—for all future leases including commercial leases but not for existing leases, will be introduced as soon as there is a suitable opportunity.

Judges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will introduce requirements for all judges to undergo comprehensive medical and psychological examinations prior to appointment and thereupon annually.

Mr. John M. Taylor: High Court judges, circuit judges and district judges are required to undergo a medical examination as a condition of their appointment. In addition, medical examinations of serving judges are undertaken when appropriate. The Lord Chancellor has no plans to revise the current requirements.

Special Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment;

(2) if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no special advisers to Ministers in the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list, by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department's courts and offices are organised administratively into six circuits, the Supreme Court group and headquarters. The total expenditure for the last two financial years and year to date are as follows:

Clean-break Settlements

Mr. Hall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many clean-break settlements have been agreed in divorce cases since the inception of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Children (Court Appearances)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court cases there have been in each of the last two years involving children (a) under 17 years and (b) under 14 years; how many of these children requested the use of (i) video link, (ii) video recording and (iii) the use of screens in court; and how many requests were granted.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought by the hon. Member on the total number of criminal cases involving children in the last two years has not been collated, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The tables give the information sought with regard to the usage of live television link equipment, pre-recorded video evidence and screens in criminal cases in the Crown court. In non-criminal cases, existing legislation does not allow for either television links or pre-recorded video evidence to be used, and the information sought with regard to the use of screens is not collated.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As at 1 December 1993, there were 94 High Court judges. The ethnic origin of those appointed as High Court judges has not been recorded formally in the past, but it is known that none is black or Asian.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department issued 170 press releases in 1986; 147 in 1987; 182 in 1988; 175 in 1989; 206 in 1990; 245 in 1991; and 333 in 1992. A total of 297 have been issued to 14 December in 1993. There are no records of press releases before 1986.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many adjudicators there are (a) at first instance and (b) on appeal dealing with immigration cases; how many are (i) full-time and (ii) part-time, and how many are (1) black, (2) Asian and (3) female.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are dealing with immigration cases (a) 116 immigration adjudicators at first instance and (b) 12 legal members and 27 lay members on appeal.

Of the immigration adjudicators at first instance, 16 are full time and 100 are part time; three are black, four are Asian and 23 are female.

Of the members of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal, three are full time and 36 are part time; four are black, six are Asian and 14 are female.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total expenditure by the Lord Chancellor's Department on running costs for 1992-93, estimated outturn for 1993-94 and plans for 1994-95 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms (in 1992-93 prices) are shown in the table:

Expenditure Review

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what will be the terms of reference of the Lord Chancellor's Department proposed fundamental review of expenditure by his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government announced in February 1993 that they would conduct in-depth reviews of all public spending by every department of state. The work will examine long-term trends in spending on individual programmes to assess whether they are sustainable, and seek out areas from which the state might withdraw altogether or where better targeting is now appropriate. The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" laid before the House of Commons on 30 November 1993 mentioned that the next batch of reviews would cover, among others, the legal departments.

The terms of reference of the review will be to:

(a) assess whether the trends in expenditure on courts and legal services are sustainable and advise what must be done if they are not;

(b) consider whether public expenditure by the legal departments in England and Wales has a clear purpose, whether the purpose is right for the 1990s and if so whether it is being pursued cost effectively.

The review team will make its first report to the Lord Chancellor by June 1994.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Quangos

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission, what plans exist to modernise audit and accountability arrangements for Government and quangos.

Sir Peter Hordern: The Comptroller and Auditor General is the statutory auditor of all Government Departments, executive agencies, and of a wide range of other public sector bodies. In addition, he audits the accounts of some other public sector organisations by agreement. For all these bodies, the Comptroller and Auditor General reports to Parliament.

The Comptroller and Auditor General is also the auditor of some 50 per cent. of executive non-departmental public bodies. For other non-departmental public bodies the auditor, normally from the private sector, is appointed by the responsible Secretary of State. The accounts of these bodies are laid before Parliament.

Recent reviews of the financial audit methods of the National Audit Office suggest that they are comparable with best practice in the auditing profession in the United Kingdom.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Arts Expenditure

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been public expenditure on the arts in real terms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: Government funding for the arts is mainly provided through the Arts Council. Since 1979, its grant in aid in each year has been, in 1979-80 prices

	£000s
1979-80	63,125
1980-81	59,980
1981-82	61,995
1982-83	65,678
1983-84	66,053
1984-85	66,703
1988-86	65,771
1966-87	81,706
1987-88	79,689
1988-89	81,704

1991-92	84,711
1992-93	92,922
1993-94	91,799

Arts Funding

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many meetings he has held with the Secretary of State for the Environment to discuss local authority funding of the arts; and when the meetings took place.

Mr. Brooke: I have had no bilateral meetings with the Secratary of State for the Environment specifically to discuss local authority funding for the arts, but my officials remain in contact with their colleagues in the Department of the Environment on this and other issues.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Sproat: My Department was established in April 1992. In the year 1992-93, the Department and its agencies spent £225,367 on identifiable heating costs. In the current year, we have spent £161,064 on identifiable costs. Costs are estimated in some cases where the new Department was a part-occupier of other Department's premises, or where energy costs refer also to other uses.

The breakdown of costs is as follows:

1992-93
Horseguards road	2,441
Grove house	1,210
Historic Royal Palaces Agency:
Hampton court	61,500
Kensington palace	15,854
Tower of London	141,416
Banquetting house	2,946
1993-94 to date

Grove house	1,746
Historic Royal Palances Agency:

Kensington palace	8,175
Tower of London	97,169

Time Zone

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations his Department has received on the subject of Britain's time zone.

Mr. Brooke: My Department has received representations on a move to central European time from its sponsor bodies and various trade organisations. All have been in favour of such a change.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what studies his Department has commissioned on the effects of an extra hour of evening daylight on rates of participation in outdoor sports activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: There has been no direct assessment of this kind. However the Sports Council, which is my Department's adviser on matters relating to sport and active recreation, takes the view that an additional hour of evening daylight would help to increase the opportunities for participation.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate his Department has made of the likely effect on the British tourist industry of an extra hour of evening daylight all through the year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: There has been no direct assessment of this kind. However, the English tourist board, which is my Department's adviser on domestic tourism matters, takes the view that an additional hour of evening daylight would help to extend the tourist season by enabling many outdoor attractions to open to a later hour. Such a move would also promote greater employment opportunities.

Commercial Television

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what mechanism there is for taking into account when determining his policies towards the awarding of commercial television franchises and towards possible mergers and takeovers in commercial television the level of violence depicted on television.

Mr. Brooke: The licensing and regulation of commercial television are matters for the Independent Television Commission, which carries out the responsibilities laid on it by the Broadcasting Act 1990. All licensees, regardless of ownership, have to comply with the ITC programme code, which includes guidance on the portrayal of violence in programmes.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many press releases his Department has issued in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage was established in April 1992. Between April and December 1992, the Department issued 129 press notices. In 1993, to date, the Department has issued 177 press notices.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the name and job description of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department, showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

The Attorney-General: There are no special ministerial advisers employed in my Department.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

The Attorney-General: There are no special advisers to Ministers in my Department.

Bromley Social Services Department

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Attorney-General if the Crown Prosecution Service has yet reached a decision in respect of prosecution over the alleged fraud within the social services department of the London borough of Bromley; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. The Metropolitan police have been asked to make further inquiries. When the result of those inquiries is known, the decision will be taken.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Government of Sudan on the subject of human rights and the rights to freedom of religious worship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's ambassador in Khartoum takes every suitable opportunity, both bilaterally and in concert with other European Union heads of mission, to express our concern to the Sudanese authorities at reported abuses of human rights and fundamental freedoms, freedom of religion among them. We were active earlier this year in securing the appointment of a special rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation in Sudan. At the United Nations General Assembly, we co-sponsored a hard-hitting resolution in the third committee, commending the work of the special rapporteur, which was passed on 6 December by 102 votes to 11.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Goodlad: Foreign and Commonwealth Office practice is not to make use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies.

(a) Since April 1992 executive search consultants have not been used in making appointments to public bodies.

(b) None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the appointments made to public bodies by him since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Goodlad: The number of press releases issued per year by the FCO and ODA press offices is as follows:

	FCO	ODA
1979	176	160

Administration Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms, in 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Goodlad: The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running the Department in 1992-93 is:

FCO Diplomatic Wing	520·976
Overseas Development Administration	45·650
Total	566·626

The total running cost limit for 1993-94 in cash terms is:

	£ million
FCO Diplomatic Wing	579·877
Overseas Development Administration	51·771
Total	631·648

An estimated outturn will be published in the spring in the 1994 departmental report and the unified Budget supplement.

Estimates of expenditure will be published in the spring in the 1994 departmental report and in the 1994-95 supply estimates.

The GDP deflators required to calculate real terms figures are shown on page 121 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", HC 31, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Manchester United Supporters

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 407, if there has yet been any response from the Turkish Government to the representations made by the British ambassador in Ankara in regard to the treatment of Manchester United supporters by the Turkish authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Turkish authorities have told the British ambassador in Ankara that a formal response to his representations would be available soon. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has also received a letter from the Turkish ambassador confirming this stressing that the Turkish authorities are taking the allegations very seriously.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 407, if he has (a) met or (b) plans to meet the Turkish ambassador to discuss the allegations of mistreatment of Manchester United supporters by the Turkish authorities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not met the Turkish ambassador to discuss these allegations. However, I met him on 8 November. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs wrote to the Turkish ambassador on 2 December with a list of the main allegations. We are currently awaiting his detailed response. When we have this we shall decide what further action should be taken.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 407, what further action he now proposes to take in regard to the treatment of Manchester United supporters by the Turkish authorities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have pressed for a report from the Turkish authorities. Further action will be considered in the light of that report.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for what reasons, at what legislative stage and by which procedure, the provisions contained in section 8(2)(b) of the Education Act 1944, concerning nursery education, were removed from the statute book.

Mr. Robin Squire: Section 8(2)(b) of the Education Act 1944 was repealed by section 38(6) and schedule 7 of the Education Act 1980, and provision was substituted by section 24 of that Act. This was designed to clarify the imprecise wording of the 1944 Act as regards the nature of any duty to provide nursery education. The 1980 Act established that, as indeed had generally been assumed to be the position, there was a discretionary power, but no duty, on local education authorities to provide either nursery schools or education in nursery classes for children under five.

Examinations

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what evidence he has of any correlation between a school's examination performance and the number of taught hours.

Mr. Robin Squire: Initial work carried out in the Department indicates on average a small but statistically significant positive correlation between the length of the taught week and educational performance as measured by public examinations and national tests. My right hon. Friend wrote to Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in England on 9 December taking up his offer of help with a review of the length of the taught week and in particular asking for his advice on the relationship between the amount of taught time and the quality and standards of pupils' work; a copy of the letter, attached to DFE press notice 420/93, is in the Library. The chief inspector will be submitting an initial report by the end of January 1994.

Degrees

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes he plans in the balance of numbers of masters level and doctoral level degrees in the arts and humanities in line with the changes for science and technology courses announced in the White Paper "Realising our Potential"; if he will discuss this issue with the British Academy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The British Academy implemented a revised structure for its awards for postgraduate research in the humanities at the start of the current academic year. This new structure is similar to that proposed in the White Paper "Realising our Potential" for courses in science and technology. For the 1993-94 academic year, the academy has made 529 new awards for study at masters level and 519 for doctoral study. It is for the academy to determine this balance.

Environmentl Education Advisers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the local education authorities that currently employ environmental education advisers and the ones that have ceased to do so over the last five years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not centrally available.

Environmental Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that all schools, in stating their moral values and outlining their general ethos, refer to the importance of their responsibility for the environment and the development of such awareness among their pupils;

(2) how he intends to meet the requirements of "Agenda 21", objectives 36.5D, incentive training, E, local environmental studies and F promoting proven education methods with respect to estuaries;

(3) if he will help to increase schools' awareness of estuarine sites of importance to wildlife by providing educational resources and training for the interpretation of estuaries;

(4) what plans he has to set up pre-service and in-service training programmes for all teachers and educational planners to ensure delivery of environmental education as recommended at the Rio summit.

Mr. Robin Squire: Environmental education is addressed through the statutory subjects of the national curriculum: schools themselves are responsible for how environmental education is delivered. National curriculum geography includes study of rivers, river basins and seas; and requires that pupils are taught about the quality and vulnerability of different environments and the possibilities for protecting and managing them.

Schools are free to include reference to the importance of their responsibilities for the environment and the development of such awareness among their pupils in the statement of the school's ethos and values included in their prospectuses, if they so wish.

The Government provide specific grant to support expenditure on the national curriculum which is devolved mainly to schools to spend on books and equipment or training. It is for schools and LEAs to decide what priority to give to particular subject areas and to make detailed plans in the light of their own staff development needs.

My right hon. Friend seeks to ensure, through his criteria for the approval of initial teacher training—ITT—that courses give a thorough preparation for teaching the national curriculum. The detailed content of courses is a matter for ITT providers and not the Government.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he has issued to local education authorities, schools and institutions of further and higher education on those aspects of Agenda 21 dealing with education for sustainable development and the environment.

Mr. Robin Squire: None. A general Government strategy document on sustainable development is in preparation.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress has been made in the implementation of the recommendation of the Toyne report: "Environmental Responsibility: An Agenda for Further and Higher Education".

Mr. Boswell: When the report was published in February 1993, I welcomed it as a valuable contribution to debate in an area which involved complex issues. The report's recommendations were addressed to the whole higher and further education sector, but particularly the institutions themselves and the funding councils. We therefore distributed the report to vice-chancellors of universities, principals of colleges and the chairmen of the funding councils, drawing the recipients' attention to the recommendations addressed to their institutions. Implementation of these is a matter for them.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to ensure that Office for Standards in Education inspectors comment on the quality of environmental education when compiling reports following a school inspection.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the Education (Schools) Act 1992, registered inspectors conducting inspections of schools must report on the quality of education and standards achieved in accordance with Ofsted's published framework for inspection.

I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Boswell: The Department occasionally uses the services of executive search consultants as one of the options available to ensure a sufficiently wide field of suitable candidates for appointment to our public bodies. Since April 1992, we have used these services once. On 4 December 1992, we announced that the Department had paid £27,000 to employ Saxton Bampfylde International plc to assist us in searching for candidates suitable for consideration for the chairmanship of the Schools Curriculum and Asessment Authority.

Funding Councils

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what criteria are used in the selection of the chair and the executive members of (a) the Further Education Funding Council, (b) the regional committees of the Further Education Funding Council, (c) the Higher Education Funding Council and (d) the Funding Agency for Schools, in respect of relevant experience and qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The criteria governing appointments to the Further Education Funding Council are set out in section 1(4) of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. There are no statutory requirements governing appointments to the regional committees of the Further Education Funding Council. However, the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century", Cm 1536, made it clear that the composition of the regional committees would be similar to that of the council. The criteria governing appointments to the Higher Education Funding Council for England are set out in section 62(4) of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. The criteria governing appointments to the Funding Agency for Schools are set out in section 3(3) of the Education Act 1993.

Education Boards

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of (a) higher education corporations, (b) further education corporations, (c) grant-maintained schools and (d) city technology colleges; what guidelines he has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many board members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions.

Mr. Boswell: (a) The board of governors of higher education corporations must consist of not fewer than 12 and not more than 24 members, plus the principal unless the principal chooses not to be a member. The composition of the board is governed by the provisions of schedule 7A to the Education Reform Act 1988. This requires that up to 13 members shall be independent members appearing to have experience in industrial, commercial or employment matters or the practice of any profession. No specific guidance has been given on particular areas from which membership should be drawn.

(b) In accordance with their instruments of government, which have been prescribed by regulations, further education corporations must have between 10 and 20 members, of whom at least half must be business members, including a representative of the local training and enterprise council. They may co-opt up to two persons who are employees or members of a local authority. In the case of corporations to conduct sixth-form colleges, the initial members of which were appointed by my right hon. Friend, those responsible for submitting nominations were asked by my right hon. Friend to have regard to the overall balance of the membership in terms of age, gender and ethnic background.

(c) The minimum number of possible members of a grant-maintained school governing body is 15. Although there is no maximum number, my right hon. Friend expects governing bodies to be of a manageable size. A guide giving details of the composition of governing bodies is available to all grant-maintained schools. It is a statutory requirement that some governors be members of the local business community. There is no requirement that governing bodies include members of ethnic minorities, women, local authorities or trade unionists.

(d) The model scheme of government for city technology colleges suggests a minimum of nine and a maximum of 20 persons on the board of governors. General guidance on the composition of the governing body is included in the model scheme, but there is no specific guidance on how many board members should come from any of the groups named.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of the (a) Further Education Funding Council, (b) regional committees of the Further Education Funding Council, regional committees of the Further Education Funding Council; (c) action trusts and (d) Funding Agency for Schools; what guidelines he has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many board members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions.

Mr. Boswell: Information relating to the first part of this question is as follows: Following my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's initiative, goals were set for increasing the representation of ethnic minority groups and women on our public bodies and the Department has made steady progress in this direction. Guidance is available on how these goals may be achieved. Notwithstanding this consideration, appointments to all our public bodies are made solely on the basis of the aptitude, merit and suitability of candidates to undertake the varying requirements associated with individual bodies.

	Maximum number of board members	Minimum number of board members
Further Education Funding Council	15	12
Regional Committees of the Further Education Funding Council	approximately 12 members
Education Associations	not less than 5 members
Funding Agency for Schools	15	10

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the total numbers of (a) chairpersons and non-executive board members of city technology colleges, (b) chairpersons and members of the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools and (c) chairpersons and members of the governing bodies of further education and sixth form colleges.

Mr. Robin Squire: (a) There are currently 14 chairmen of the city technology college governing bodies. Information is not held centrally on the total number of members of governing bodies but each governing body has at least nine members.

(b) There are 697 chairmen of operating self governing —grant-maintained—schools' governing bodies. There are a further 108 chairmen designate for schools which are shortly to become self governing. Information is not held centrally of the total number of members of governing bodies but each governing body has at least 15 members.

(c) The governing bodies of the 464 further education and sixth form colleges normally have between 10 and 20 members, including a chairman.

Assisted Places

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent on the assisted places scheme in Devon in each financial year since 1990.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is given in the table:

Financial Year	DFE expenditure £000s
1990-91	1,903
1991-92	2,259
1992-93	2,573

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Boswell: The expenditure figures for advertising, including press, television and radio, by the Department for the financial years since 1979 are in the table.

Year	Advertising £k
1979-80	91·6
1980-81	8·9
1981-82	86·9
1982-83	6·0
1983-84	9·6
1984-85	18·5
1985-86	14·8
1986-87	532·0
1987-88	280·0
1988-89	515·0

1990-91	2,604·0
1991-92	3,037·9
1992-93	1,086·4

It would involve disproportionate costs to break down into individual months the advertising campaigns run by the Department from January to December 1993. Advertising costs are not billed when the adverts actually appear. Details of the campaigns run in the calendar year 1993 are as follows:

Campaign	Date	Costs £k
GM schools	February to March	200·0
Testing in schools	April to May	449·0
Further and high education charters	September to October	486·0
	Total	1,135·0

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Boswell: The number of press notices issued by the Department in each year since 1979 are as follows:

	Number
1979	124
1980	209
1981	201
1982	311

	Number
1983	434

Henry VIII Clauses

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many Henry VIII clauses have been contained in legislation from the Department of Education since 1979; and if he will list the relevant clause and Act in each case.

Mr. Boswell: The following provisions in Education Acts enacted since 1979 empower the Secretary of State to amend the Act in which they are contained:

	Section
Education (No. 2) Act 1986:	Section 30(5) and paragraph 5 of Schedule 3;
Education Reform Act 1988:	sections 3(4)(a), 41, 43(2)(a), 52(7)(a), 76(14) and 146(1) and paragraph 4 of Schedule 9; and
Education Act 1993:	section 41(10) and paragraph 1(4) of Schedule 3.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is as follows:

i. The final outturn for the net recurrent costs of running the department in 1992-93 is £103·275 million.
ii. The estimated outturn for 1993-94 is £89·575 million.
iii. The Department's planned running costs expenditure for 1994-95 is £89 million.

The GDP deflators required to calculate real terms figures are shown on page 121 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", HC 31, copies of which are available in the Library.

It should be noted that the 1992-93 figures includes recurrent expenditure of £15·347 million by the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools.

Secretary of State's Powers

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many powers were conferred upon the holder of his post by (a) the Education Reform Act 1988, (b) the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and (c) the Education Act 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: These Acts confer on the Secretary of State a number of powers. Examples are powers to give directions—for example, the power under section 34(1) of the 1988 Act by order to direct the date by which a scheme of local management is to be submitted—and powers of approval—for example, of proposal for the establishment of a new grant-maintained school under section 51 of the 1993 Act. The legislation also contains many examples of powers to prescribe forms or information to be contained in notices, or periods in which duties are to be performed. To identify all the powers in the legislation referred to in the question could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Student Income Survey

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the results of the recent survey of student income and expenditure conducted by Research Services Ltd. will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Research Services Ltd. will be publishing the survey report today. I am placing copies in the Library.

The survey is an important contribution to the information available about students' financial circumstances since the introduction of student loans. Other recent surveys in this area have been based on small, unrepresentative samples and often less than rigorous questionnaires. The survey reported on today is the most extensive of its sort since the last one in the series in academic year 1988-89.

It confirms, as expected, that public support for students under 26 who have taken out Government-subsidised loans has increased since the last survey was conducted in 1988-89. Their income from grant, loan, access funds and benefits rose by about a third in real terms as compared with grant and benefits in 1988-89.

At the same time, the report records the reduced financial burden on parents, whose contribution to younger students' income has on average fallen by about a fifth in real terms since 1988-89. On average, parents have continued to pay in full the contribution expected of them, with most paying more and only about a third paying less.

The Government particularly welcome the survey's finding that a higher proportion of students from lower social groups are entering higher education. The fears of those who said that the introduction of loans would deter these groups have not been realised.

A system of loans for maintenance rates is based on the recognition that everyone's spending needs are different. The accelerated switch from grant to loan which my right hon. Friend announced on 30 November will enhance still further the flexibility of our system of student support.

School Minibuses (Safety Belts)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he proposes to make compulsory the fitting of safety belts to all seated positions in minibuses owned or used by schools.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

We are currently carrying out a review of the full technical and cost implications of seat belts in these vehicles.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police, Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the resources available to the police forces in Wales to enable them to maintain an appropriate level of policing over the Christmas period.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for the chief officer of each force to assess his operational requirements at any time, and to provide the appropriate level of policing.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the possibility of potential inadequacy of police resources in Wales over the Christmas period.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have received one representation. This relates to police staffing levels in the south Wales police area over the Christmas bank holiday period.

Safer Cities Initiative

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to annnounce which local authorities will receive resources under the safer cities initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to make an announcement shortly.

Racism and Immigrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the specific actions his Department has taken to combat racism in (a) Tower Hamlets and (b) the United Kingdom;

(2) what action his Department has taken to encourage a positive public perception of immigrants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Entry Refusals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals against refusal of entry to visitors were made in the last year in which appeals were accepted; and how many were successful.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information on the outcome of appeals against exclusion and against refusal of entry clearance for temporary purposes is given in Table 8.1 of Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1992", Cm 2368, a copy of which is in the Library.

Immigration Complaints Audit Committee

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the three members he has appointed to the new immigration and nationality department complaints audit committee are members of the Conservative party.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The members of the IND complaints audit committee were appointed on the basis of the experience and expertise they would bring to the task. Party political affiliation, or the absence of it, played no part in their selection.

As a matter of public record, one of the members is a Conservative member of a borough council. I have no knowledge of the political affiliations, if any, of the other two members.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in bringing forward proposals to ensure that the action to prevent drug misuse is co-ordinated effectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The fight against drugs is one of the Government's priorities. We remain committed to tackling every aspect of the drugs problem and are actively addressing issues across a range of policy areas which are the responsibility of a number of Government Departments. We need, however, to review our strategy to ensure that the policies we are pursuing are correctly identified and are co-ordinated effectively.

The Secretary of State for Health and I have therefore decided—with the support of our colleagues—to set up a new central drugs co-ordination unit. The unit will have two major tasks. First, it will ensure that departmental policies are planned, developed and implemented in England within a clear strategic framework. Second, the unit will take the lead in devising an effective basis for local co-ordination of action to tackle the drugs problem, which will add significantly to the value of much excellent work already being carried out locally in the public, private and voluntary sectors. The unit's immediate task is to review the strategy on drugs published in 1989 and make recommendations for its improvement.

The unit will be attached to the Privy Council Office, reporting to the Lord President of the Council, who chairs the Cabinet committee on drugs issues. Individual Government Departments will remain responsible for their policies which impact on the drugs problem and will work closely with the unit.

In Scotland, the arrangements for co-ordination are among the issues being addressed by the drugs task force led by my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office. The Secretary of State for Wales will shortly announce the arrangements which will apply in Wales.

Film Violence

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider introducing further restrictions on the depiction of violence in films and videos.

Mr. Maclean: We already have a well-established and rigorous system of video classification exercised by the British Board of Film Classification under the Video Recordings Act 1984 and 1993. In practice the BBFC exercises a similar role in relation to cinema films, although the legal responsibility under the Cinemas Act 1985 lies with local authorities.

The BBFC's approach to the classification of films and videos is discussed in its annual report for 1992, a copy of which is available in the Library. This makes it clear that the BBFC takes its responsibilities very seriously, and that it is particularly concerned about the depiction of violence. The BBFC is required to have special regard to the fact that videos will be viewed in the home; consequently films are more restrictively classified on video than for the cinema, and some cinema films may not be regarded as suitable for release on video in any version. The BBFC, with others, has commissioned research into the viewing habits of young offenders in order to inform its future classification policy, and I understand that the results of this research are expected to be published early next year.

The Government are not complacent about this issue, and we keep the present controls under regular review. Nevertheless, as I explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 7 December, Official Report, column 163, the law can go only so far and the final responsibility for what is seen must inevitably rest in the home.

Charities

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charities are currently registered in the united Kingdom; and how many of them hold funds in excess of £5 million.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of November 1993, there were 169,829 charities on the register kept by the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales.

No reliable figure exists for the number of charities which hold funds or other assets worth £5 million or more. There are, however, at least 345 registered charities in England and Wales with an annual income of £5 million or more in their last financial year.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to altering the guidelines to ensure that charities dispose of their funds in excess of maintaining reasonable resources.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This is a matter for the Charity Commissioners. I understand that the commissioners are concerned about the high level of accumulations of income of some charities and are currently considering the key policy issues that arise from this. The commissioners will complete their examination of the matter in the new year and are planning to issue formal guidance to charities shortly after that.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by location, the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Howard: I will write to the hon. Member.

Operation Cheetah

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many man hours have been used in Operation Cheetah at the latest date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Merseyside police estimate that, since April 1990, approximately 22,000 man days have been devoted to Operation Cheetah.

Combat 18

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consider launching an investigation into the activities of the group Combat 18.

Mr. Charles Wardle: If anyone has information that an individual or group is engaged in any kind of criminal activity he or she should pass it to the police. It is part of the normal responsibility of the police to keep an eye on all organisations that might pose a threat to public order.

Prisoners (Compensation Payments)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners or ex-prisoners instituted legal action in relation to their imprisonment against the Home Office in 1992; and how many of these cases were settled out of court or were found against the Home Office;

(2) on how many occasions prisoners or ex-prisoners were paid compensation or ex-gratia payment for other than losses of personal property in 1992; and what is the total of that compensation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for replies to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Peter Luff, dated 16 December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent questions about litigation and compensation payments to prisoners and ex-prisoners.

I have assumed for the purpose of this reply that your questions relate to litigation and compensation payments connected to time spent in prison custody, rather than wrongful conviction, which of course falls outside my sphere of responsibility.

Prison Service records show 130 pieces of legal action against the department lodged by prisoners or ex-prisoners in 1992. Of these 13 have been settled out of court or found against the Home Office; two have been withdrawn or struck out and the remaining 115 appear as outstanding (although there may be some delay in the recording of resolved cases). The compensation (including ex-gratia payments) paid to prisoners and ex-prisoners in 1992, other than for loss of property, was as follows:

Injuries at work	£265,813
Excessive detention	£22,718
Other claims[1]	£123,114
Total	£411,645

[1] Including personal injury outside work.

Figures for the number of individual claims are not recorded and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Wymott Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what educational facilities are available to prisoners currently housed at Wymott prison;

(2) what work facilities are available to prisoners currently housed at Wymott prison;

(3) what training facilities are available to prisoners currently housed at Wymott prison;

(4) what exercise facilities outside the cell block area are available to prisoners currently housed at Wymott prison;

(5) what progress is being made in the refurbishment of Wymott prison following the recent riots; what hours and days of the week are the contractors on site; and what proportion of the building is now habitable.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent questions about prisoners facilities and the progress of refurbishment at Wymott Prison.

There are facilities for forty full-time education places during the week within the education department, with a further forty prisoners participating in part-time evening education within the Houseblock.

A range of work is available now and includes tailoring, weaving, engineering and laundry. There are enough places for the number of prisoners held at Wymott. Further work places will be available in the New Year as the population rises.

In addition to the training provided through education and work, a number of accredited NVQ and formal Vocational Training Courses (VTCs) will be introduced over coming months.

The important work with prisoners to help them address offending behavour will commence in the New Year. This will include delivery of the core sex offender programme, for which staff are being trained as we promised when it was decided to move sex offenders from Risley to Wymott.

There are ample outdoor areas for fresh-air exercise, together with a fully equipped gymnasium.

Of the four house blocks, 'B' House is already fully occupied while refurbishment of 'A' House is on line for completion by 23 December and ready for occupation in mid-January 1994. The two remaining house blocks are to be demolished and re-built with stronger, cellular accommodation which will not be available for occupancy for about two years. Contractors are working on site for eleven hours a day, seven days a week.

Sheehy Inquiry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the information provided to the Sheehy inquiry on the number of policemen injured on duty;

(2) if he will publish the information provided to the Sheehy inquiry on the probability of death in service for police officers and the life expectations of those retiring at age 50 and 60 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on these subjects was provided to the inquiry from a number of different sources. That provided by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary for England and Wales on the number of police officers assaulted on duty and by the Government Actuary's Department relating to the assumed probability of death in service for police officers and assumed life expectancy of those retiring is shown in the tables:

Prisoners (Release)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it obligatory for the prison authorities to give prior notification to the police and to the victims of the crime of the release of a prisoner convicted of assault.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the early release arrangements introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1991, the Prison Service already provides the police with prior notice of the release dates of all offenders, irrespective of the offence committed. I do not believe that it would be practicable to require the Prison Service to inform the victim or the victim's family in every instance that an offender, or particular class of offender, is due to be released. However, the Probation Service national standards for the supervision of offenders in the community which came into effect at the same time as the early release arrangements, require that in particularly sensitive cases the probation officer should, when completing a pre-discharge or parole assessment report, address the whereabouts, attitude towards release and concerns of the victim or the victim's family.

Central European Time

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now intends to bring forward his proposals for the adoption of central European time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 4 November 1933, Official Report, column 363.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department has given to the likely effect on rates of crime against the person of a move to central European time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1989 Green Paper "Summer Time—A Consultation Document", CM22, considered that definite conclusions about the possible effect of a move to central European time on crime in general, or on particular offences, are difficult to draw.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate his Department has made of the cost to the public exchequer of a move to central European time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 15 January 1993, at column 828.

Summer Time

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been his Department's response to the proposed seventh directive on summer time arrangements in the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have made clear in negotiations on the draft seventh directive that its terms are acceptable, while proposing that, on subsidiarity grounds, summer time start and end dates would better be the subject of a recommendation than of Community legislation.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Howard: Since April 1992, the appointments of chief executive of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Data Protection Registrar have been advertised.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Howard: Executive search consultants are used in making appointments to public bodies where it is thought that they will be able to supplement usefully the field of applicants.

Since April 1992, consultants have been used for the post of chief executive of the Commission for Racial Equality and in the current competition for the post of Data Protection Registrar.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not our practice to disclose individual contract values. However, the combined value of the two contracts was £32,500.

"Voluntary Action"

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the proposals in the report, "Voluntary Action".

Mr. Peter Lloyd: "Voluntary Action" was written by Barry Knight of the Centre for Research and Innovation in Social Policy and Practice: the views in the report are those of the author. The Government consider the report to be a worthwhile contribution to the continuing debate on charities and the voluntary sector, but do not accept the report's proposals to end charitable status, tax concessions for charitable giving or to abolish the Charity Commission. The Government also consider that the proposal to split the voluntary sector into "first force" and "third sector" is too simple and mechanistic.

Police

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the police establishment plus supernumeraries for each month of 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 24 November, at columns 55-56. Additional figures for the period September to November are given in the table. I will write to the hon. Member when complete figures for December are available.

Art Theft

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to enable police forces to improve the detection of art theft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The investigation of art theft is entirely a matter for individual chief officers of police. Some police forces have already taken steps to improve the effectiveness of their operations against art theft. The establishment of the artefact classification and indentification system by the Metropolitan police is one example to which I brought the hon. Member's attention on 7 July.

I cannot stress too greatly the important role members of the public play in preventing this type of crime by marking and keeping details and photographs of their valuable possessions.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Howard: The number of news releases issued by the Home Office for each full calendar year since 1979 is:

	Number
1979	250
1980	249
1981	237
1982	207
1983	249
1984	327

Immigration Advisory Service

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are (a) the names, (b) the occupations and (c) the salaries of the trustees of the organisation formerly called UKIAS.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The trustees of the Immigration Appeals Advisory Service are Mr. Humfrey Malins, Chairman, Dr. M. S. Akram, Mr. Alf Dubs, Ms Rachel Pickavance and Dr. Z. U. Khan. I understand that trustees receive no remuneration for their services. The hon. Member may wish to address his request for information about the occupations of trustees direct to the Service, which, as I said in a reply to him on 10 December, Official Report, column 418, is an independent body.

Prison, Birmingham

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what present proposals he has to build a new prison in Birmingham.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about any proposals the Prison Service has to build a new prison in Birmingham.

Although the Prison Service is actively seeking sites for new prisons, at present there are no specific plans to build a new prison in Birmingham. Any such sites must be near to the locality from which prisoners come in order to meet our commitments set out in the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice". At present, there are insufficient prison places available in the West Midlands area to house all the prisoners who come from that area.

Hunters

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect his proposals for an offence of aggravated trespass would have on hunters entering land belonging to people who have not given them permission to do so.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The proposed new offence will apply to all trespassers, including hunters, who disrupt, or seek to disrupt, a lawful activity on land.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Howard: The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running the Department in 1992-93 is £1,421 million. The estimated outturn for 1993-94 is £1,642 million—£1,590 million at 1992-93 prices. These figures include the costs of immigration service staff and of Prison Service grades. The planned running costs expenditure for 1994-95 will be published in the Home Office annual report 1994 and in the unified Budget supplement.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about Mr. Graham Wyn Jones, Assistant Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Howard: Following a review by Mr. Jeremy Gompertz QC of the evidence relating to Mr. Wyn Jones's conduct, the then Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informed my predecessor in October 1992 that he regarded Mr. Wyn Jones's behaviour as reprehensible and wholly inconsistent with what was expected of someone holding the office of Assistant Commissioner.

The Permanent Under-Secretary of State of the Home Department heard representations from Mr. Wyn Jones in January 1993.

My predecessor subsequently concluded that Her Majesty the Queen should be advised that Mr. Wyn Jones should no longer be regarded as fit to hold his office. I delayed putting such advice to Her Majesty so that Mr. Wyn Jones should have an opportunity to seek leave to apply for judicial review. This he did, but on 2 December 1993 the Divisional Court refused him leave.

I accordingly advised Her Majesty the Queen that Mr. Wyn Jones must be regarded as unfit to continue to hold office as an Assistant Commissioner and Her Majesty has now withdrawn his warrant of appointment. Mr. Wyn Jones has been removed from office.

Court Escort Service

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in selecting a contractor to operate the court escort service in the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Howard: On 16 February, my predecessor announced an intention to invite tenders for the provision of the court escort and custody service for the Metropolitan police district, under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

After carefully considering the proposals submitted, the Prisons Board has decided to award the contract to Securicor Custodial Services Ltd. A contract will be signed before the end of the year.

The new service will come into operation in five phases starting in July 1994, using staff who are required by statute and under the contract to be properly trained and vetted. It will release prison and police officers to concentrate on duties more appropriate to their particular skills and duties.

Travel Documents

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes there have been in the policy and practice on the issue of Home Office travel documents.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Officials have written to the United Kingdom representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and to other interested organisations setting out changes which are to be introduced on 1 January 1994. The new arrangements clarify our policy and practice in the issue of Home Office travel documents and the charges we make for them. I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library.

Parish Constables

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made on the parish constable initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Commitments have been received from police forces and communities to 38 schemes. Twenty of these schemes will be evaluated by the Home Office.

I am greatly encouraged by the response to this initiative, which has been very positive. Communities and police forces all over the country are engaged in a constructive process of consultation. I expect to be in a position to give an account of progress on a force by force basis early in the spring.

Hit and Run Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police authority for the last four years, and for this year to date, the number of hit and run vehicle accidents involving pedestrians that have been reported; how many of the accidents were caused by stolen vehicles; and how many resulted in the death of the pedestrian.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

The number of hit and run accidents involving pedestrians and the number of hit and run accidents involving pedestrian fatalities for the last four years for each police authority are given in the tables. Data for 1993 are not yet available. Information on stolen vehicles involved in injury accidents is not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the employment status of the Under-Secretary General of the department of humanitarian affairs at the United Nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Under-Secretary General of the United Nations department of humanitarian affairs is appointed by the United Nations Secretary-General on a fixed term contract for one year, which may be renewed by mutual agreement.

United Nations Emergency Intervention

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what policy proposals he has to improve the co-ordination of United Nations activities in emergency intervention situations;

(2) what proposals he has for changing the role of the department of humanitarian affairs at the United Nations;

(3) what assessment he has made of the performance of the department of humanitarian affairs at the United Nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The views of Her Majesty's Government on the improvement of the co-ordination of United Nations emergency relief and the performance to date and future role of the United Nations department of humanitarian affairs are set out in the address of my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development to the United Nations General Assembly of 19 November 1993, a copy of which has been placed in both the Libraries of the House.

Aid

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how British aid is helping poverty reduction in developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British aid programme, in collaboration with the World Bank and other donors, is supporting economic reform programmes in developing countries, which will set the policy framework for sustainable growth and create jobs. At the same time the Overseas Development Administration is assisting recipient governments to define and carry out their own poverty reduction strategies, to ensure that the poor benefit from economic growth. We are also providing direct assistance to the poor in developing countries, to enhance their livelihood security, increase their incomes, and improve their access to basic social services.

Non-governmental Organisations

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list payments made to each non-governmental organisation under the joint funding scheme in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Details of all ODA grants made to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations under the joint funding scheme, for the financial year 1992-93, are set out in the table.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Contractors

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee if he will list the work within the House that is now undertaken by private contractors.

Mr. Channon: Private contractors are used extensively in the provision of services to the House. The Parliamentary Works Directorate makes use of contractors and consultants for works projects funded by subheads A1, A2, and A3 of the vote for works services; and Departments of the House commission consultants and contractors to provide administrative or technical support in such fields as recruitment, training, catering and information technology. Details are a matter for the respective heads of Department.

National Audit Office

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission how many reports have been prepared by Clark Whitehill into the value for money achieved by the National Audit Office; what recommendations it has made for improvements; which of its reports he will make publicly available; if he will give his reasons in respect of those he will not place in the public domain; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Peter Hordern: The Public Accounts Commission appointed Clark Whitehill as external auditors of the National Audit Office on 1 April 1990 for a period of up to five years. At the request of the Commission they have so far produced two value for money reports on the National Audit Office.

In November 1991, Clark Whitehill reported on the National Audit Office's environmental policy, monitoring and reporting. They recommended that the NAO adopt an environmental policy statement, set environmental targets and objectives, and improve monitoring of environmental legislation and European Community activities. The Comptroller and Auditor General took prompt action in response to all recommendations.

In 1993 Clark Whitehill reviewed the National Audit Office's certification audit methods. They reported to the Commission in June 1993, and concluded that NAO methods are comparable to best practice in the auditing profession and result in efficient audits of an acceptable quality. Again, the Comptroller and Auditor General has taken action to implement the recommendations, and he reported details of progress to the Commission earlier this month. He will be reporting again in 1994.

I have arranged for copies of both reports to be placed in the Library.

Public Accounts Commission

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission (1) what plans he has to centralise the functions of the Audit Office by relocating the employment and training division from Sheffield to London;

(2) what estimate he has made for the cost of relocating the employment and training division of the Audit Office from Sheffield to London; and what estimates have been made of the travelling expenses that would arise from such a relocation.

Sir Peter Hordern: Decisions on the administration and organisation of the NAO are a matter for the Comptroller and Auditor General to take within his budget, which is considered by the Public Accounts Commission on behalf of the House.

I understand that the NAO has 15 staff in Sheffield who undertake the audit of the Department of Employment, the Employment Services Agency and a number of non-departmental public bodies. This work is carried out at various locations across the country but only 4 per cent. has to be done in Sheffield.

As part of a continuing appraisal of the scope for improving efficiency in its audit, the NAO has decided to reorganise the handling of the work carried out from its Sheffield office. The NAO has estimated that it will achieve a net saving of £1 million over 10 years by arranging for some of the work to be undertaken by private sector accountancy firms located where the work needs to be done and by transferring responsibility for other work to its headquarters in London.

PRIME MINISTER

Homeless People

Q10. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister when he next expects to meet representatives of London's homeless people.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so at present. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction frequently meets staff of voluntary sector bodies working with homeless people in central London; and he regularly visits projects managed by these agencies.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

The Prime Minister: My special advisers are Sir Rodric Braithwaite KCMG, Mrs. Sarah Hogg, Mr. Nicholas True CBE, Mr. Damian Green, Lord Poole and Mrs. Katherine Ramsay. Their duties vary.

Norwegian and German Prime Ministers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 687, if he will give more specific details on the range of issues he discussed with his Norwegian and German counterparts.

The Prime Minister: My discussions with Prime Minister Brundtland of Norway on 16 November covered the European Community, Norwegian accession and Norway's whaling policy. In my talks with Chancellor Kohl on 25 November, we discussed problems of unemployment; growth and competitiveness within the EC; enlargement; subsidiarity and the fight against terrorism; drug trafficking and organised crime; GATT; the forthcoming NATO summit and other foreign policy issues, including Bosnia.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 16 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House. I shall be having further meetings later today.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to ratify the chemical weapons convention before the convention enters into force.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom played an active role in the negotiations leading to the opening for signature of the chemical weapons convention and continues to play an active role in the preparatory commission in The Hague, which is working towards the establishment of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons. The United Kingdom signed the Convention in January 1993 and we intend to ratify the chemical weapons convention at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he intends to put in place the necessary legislation to enable the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligation under the chemical weapons covention in time for Her Majesty's Government to ratify the convention by 18 July 1994.

The Prime Minister: We intend to introduce implementing legislation for the convention as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many press releases his office has issued in each year since 1979.

The Prime Minister: Since I took office in 1990, some 200 press releases have been issued each year. Figures for previous years would be obtainable only at disproportionate costs.

EC Infrastructure Programmes

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out (a) the treaty powers and (b) other powers granted to the European Commission with regard to infrastructure programmes.

The Prime Minister: Titles XII—trans-European networks—and XIV—economic and social cohesion—of part 3 of the EC treaty, as amended by the treaty on European Union, are those principally concerned with infrastructure. The regulations governing the structural and cohesion funds—EC2080-2085/93 and EC792/93—set out the role of the Commission in this field. Articles 198d-e of the treaty refer to the European investment bank which lends to investment projects, the greater proportion of which are infrastructure improvements.

EC Official Languages

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to seek a reduction in the number of official languages in the European Community.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to seek a reduction in the number of official languages of the European Community. It is right that legislation and judgments which apply in each member state should be officially available in the language of the citizens of that country.

European Commission

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy regarding the number of Commissioners appropriate to an EC expanded by the four applicant countries; and by what measures he seeks to achieve such a quantity.

The Prime Minister: At the Brussels European Council on 10 and 11 December, all member states agreed that the EFTA applicants should be given one Commissioner each, with the question of the number of Commissioners to be reviewed at the 1996 intergovernmental conference. We have made clear our view that it would not be in the best interests, either of the Commission or of the Community as a whole, to maintain the present arrangements governing the number of Commissioners as the European Union continues to enlarge.

Capital Markets

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Presidency conclusions as to how the capital markets can be made more efficient in order to encourage a flow of savings into productive job-creating investments.

The Prime Minister: Implementation of a number of directives relating to banking and financial services should facilitate the development of efficient capital markets within the Community. Member states also need to ensure that domestic capital markets encourage the flow of savings into productive job-creating investments. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, recently announced that the Treasury is currently reviewing this area. The Economic Secretary is examining the role of banks and other financial institutions in channelling finance to industry. The Financial Secretary is examining the impact of tax and other Government policies on savings and the flow of funds through the economy. These reviews will make an important contribution to ensuring that policies in this area enhance our economic performance.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the EC directives which the Government have proposed so far should be abolished, modified or replaced on the ground of subsidiarity, setting out what has happened so far in each case.

The Prime Minister: In Community discussions about putting the principle of subsidiarity into effect, the Government have put forward a large number of suggestions for the amendment, repeal or withdrawal of existing or proposed legislation. The Commission's report to the European Council last week reflected many of our suggestions and, following the European Council's endorsement, action will now begin in Brussels to put the report's recommendations into effect. A copy of the Commission's report has been made available to the House.

New Jobs

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister what opportunities are available to the European Commission for the discovery of a source of new jobs which are not also available to national Governments.

The Prime Minister: As the Government stated in their contribution to the Commission's white paper, the Community's central aim must be the creation of conditions for enterprise, innovation and investment to generate wealth and employment. To achieve this the Government recommended that the Commission should ensure that the single market works effectively, that the principle of subsidiarity is put into effect and that it should undertake an audit of community legislation to remove barriers to employment. All these proposals were reflected in the conclusions of the European Council.

National Regulations

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the European Council on the request to the European Commission to audit national regulations.

The Prime Minister: The European Council in Brussels on 10 and 11 December adpoted a short-to-medium-term action plan to reinforce the competitiveness of the European economy, which the Council will monitor. The Council recognised the importance of a large European export-oriented market and proposed a number of measures to exploit this major asset.

The Council recognised that legislation must be simplified and reduced in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, and that consistency between national and Community legislation must be ensured. The Council requested the Commission to examine ways of creating a more favourable business environment for small and medium-sized enterprises for example, by providing for an audit of Community and national regulations in terms of their consequences for employment. Any review of national regulation will respect the competences of Community and member states and the principle of subsidiarity.

The Government have nearly completed a comprehensive review of 3,500 regulations which impact on United Kingdom business to ensure that they do not impede our potential for wealth and job creation. We welcome similar efforts at the Community level and at member state level systematically to review legislation which impairs the competitiveness of European industries and Europe's potential for economic growth and employment.

EC Voting Procedures

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister what powers he has to prevent any dilution of the blocking minority under qualified majority voting procedures; and to what extent such powers are constrained by the presidency conclusions.

The Prime Minister: Any change to the qualified majority voting procedures must be agreed by all member states. The question of the blocking minority threshold in an enlarged Community was not resolved at the European Council held in Brussels on 10 and 11 December.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister to what extent additional loans from the European investment bank will be underwritten by other EC institutions.

The Prime Minister: The European investment bank is required by its statute to lend only if it has a guarantee from a member state or other adequate guarantees, such as from a commercial bank. It is not the practice, nor is it intended, for Community institutions to guarantee EIB loans within the European Community.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Car Boot Sales

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence she has of farmers having used fields subject to set-aside payments for car boot sales.

Mr. Jack: Car boot sales can be held on land set aside under the non-agricultural use option of the voluntary five year set-aside scheme; payments under this option are reduced to reflect the fact that the farmer may be earning some income from the land. In certain, strictly defined circumstances, car boot sales may also be permitted on some other land set aside under the five year scheme and the arable area payments scheme. In all cases, it is the farmer's responsibility to obtain any planning permission that may be required.

The information which we have about the numbers of car boot sales on set-aside land is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to sell off any woods owned by the Forestry Commission in East Anglia under the current disposal programme.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission has no forest land on the market at present in Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire or Essex.

Cetaceans

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures she intends to introduce to implement article 12(4) of the EC habitats and species directive (92/43/EEC) which requires member states to ensure that incidental capture and killing of dolphins, whales and other cetaceans in fishing gear does not endanger the population of those species.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 26 October, Official Report, column 567.

Sea Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures she intends to introduce to monitor the incidental entanglement of sea birds in fishing gear and to ensure that populations of those sea birds do not become endangered.

Mr. Jack: The sea fisheries inspectorate is instructed to report immediately any major incidents of sea birds being caught in fishing gear. They also make an annual report. There is no evidence to suggest that cases of entrapment, which are rare, are currently threatening the survival of any species of sea bird.

Forestry, Hillsborough

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to sell any of the Forestry Commission woods in the constituency of Sheffield, Hillsborough under the current disposal programme.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission has no forest land on the market at present in the hon. Member's constituency.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what her Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if she will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992;

(2) which of the appointments made to public bodies by her Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Jack: Executive search consultants are occasionally used to find candidates for full-time executive appointments or other major appointments. Since April 1992, no consultants have been used for this purpose, and none of the public body posts, for which this Department has responsibility, has been advertised.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to release grant and aid payments to those sheep farmers who have not yet received their sheep annual premium; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Payment of the first and second advance of premium under the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme in the United Kingdom has already been made in respect of 82 per cent. of the claims received. Outstanding advance payments will be made to producers as soon as we are satisfied that the claims meet the requirements of the scheme.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many press releases her Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: The number of press releases issued by MAFF over recent years is as follows.

	Number
1980	488
1981	439
1982	482
1983	400

Figures for 1979 are not available.

One-Net Rule

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what decision she has reached following her consultation exercise on the application of the one-net rule.

Mr. Jack: We had hoped that the EC would agree on a Community wide rule that only one type of net should be carried on a fishing trip. This would have been a useful measure to support enforcement of technical conservation rules. Unfortunately, no agreement has been reached in the EC on this issue. We therefore consulted the industry on the way forward.

A range of views was put to us, but a significant proportion of the United Kingdom industry believed that we should not continue unilaterally to apply a one-net rule in the United Kingdom, and should discontinue it unless and until an EC-wide measure was introduced.

We have decided to accept that view: it would not be reasonable for our industry to be more tightly regulated in this regard than its competitors from other EC countries fishing in the same waters.

The one-net rule will therefore end on 31 December 1993.

Lambs

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she proposes to take to improve the protection of orphan lambs in markets.

Mr. Soames: A new order has been made under the Animal Health Act 1981 which gives additional protection to young lambs and goat kids at livestock markets. From 1 January 1994, the amount of time unaccompanied lambs and goat kids under four weeks of age can spend in a livestock market will be limited to four hours. While at the market they must be housed in solid sided draught free pens and provided with dry bedding. A further provision to ban lambs and goat kids from markets if they have an unhealed navel will come into force on 1 January 1995.

The Welfare of Animals at Markets Order 1990 already lays down certain other provisions to protect unaccompanied lambs under four weeks of age at markets. This legislation specifies that these animals must be housed under cover in bedded accommodation, and also precludes sick lambs from being exposed for sale. These provisions also apply to goat kids.

Bananas

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to prevent the smuggling of dollar bananas into the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 10 December 1993]: Controls of imports of bananas apply at the first point of entry into the Community. Licences are required for all imports from third countries. In the single European market, once bananas have been cleared into free circulation anywhere in the Community they may be traded freely. National controls on the entry of dollar bananas already entered into free circulation by another member state are not permitted.

Farming Debts

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information she has on the level of indebtedness among (a) specialist sheep farmers and (b) mixed cattle and sheep farmers in the (i) severely disadvantaged areas and (ii) disadvantaged areas for each year since 1984.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The farm business survey provides data on indebtedness from a sample of farm businesses in England. Results for the new farm classification are available only from 1986-87 onwards. The table shows the average level of total liabilities per farm and expresses this as a proportion of average total assets.

Farm Workers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many full-time hired farm workers are employed on farm holdings in the less-favoured areas; and if she will provide a breakdown by county according to the most recent figures for each year since 1982.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The number of full-time hired farm workers employed on farm holdings in the less favoured areas by county in each year since 1982 is shown in the table.

1. Minor holdings are excluded.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the number of producers entitled to hill livestock compensatory allowances by county and local authority subdivisions, distinguishing between those located in severely disadvantaged areas and disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The table shows the most up to date information available on the number of claims paid under the 1993 hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme from producing farming eligible land wholly within the severely disadvantaged area —SDA—or the disadvantaged area—DA—or on mixed land—SDA combined with DA land. There are also about 4,000 holdings in the United Kingdom which consist of SDA or DA land plus other land. Most of the claims expected for the 1993 scheme have by now been received.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average level of funding per capita allocated by each regional health authority to district health authorities in 1993-94 for purchasing the range of services covered by the fund-holding scheme on behalf of patients in non-fund-holding general practitioner practices.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of each regional health authority's total expenditure is spent on activities relating to mental health.

Blood Donors

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 2 December, Official Report, columns 706-7, what assessment she has made of the problems with standards in other countries, most recently Germany; and if she will now institute a ban on imports of blood and blood products from countries which use paid donors.

Mr. Sackville: Under the Medicines Act 1968 every company which manufactures blood products for marketing in the United Kingdom is inspected and licensed and individual products are licensed for safety, quality and efficacy. Blood or plasma collected overseas for processing into blood products which are to be imported into the United Kingdom under United Kingdom product licence is subjected to the rigorous screening tests that are required by our licensing authority. Furthermore all plasma pools from which any blood product released in this country is produced are tested for viral markers by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control. No blood is imported and in the light of these safeguards we do not propose to ban imports of blood products.

Hospitals (Use)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which view will prevail where there is a fundamental difference of opinion between health and industry purchasers and fund-holding general practitioners about the use of a particular hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fund-holders have the freedom to purchase the best possible care for their patients from whichever hospital they judge best. They are however required to share their broad purchasing intentions with district health authorities in advance to enable provider units to plan effectively.

Charing Cross Hospital

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether Charing Cross hospital, as it is presently equipped and staffed, will be able to meet the requirements as the focal point of all west London cancer services; and what extra expenditure will be required in order for it to do so.

Dr. Mawhinney: No specific studies of the capacity of the Charing Cross site for cancer services have been carried out. However, the Hammersmith/Charing Cross relocation group is studying the possible relocation of all the services of the Hammersmith and Charing Cross (including cancer services) on to one site.

Royal Marsden Hospital

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received from the international medical community in connection with the future of the Royal Marsden hospital; and if she will list them.

Dr. Mawhinney: Representations were received from the following.

Teenage Advertising

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect of cigarette advertising upon teenage take-up of smoking.

Mr. Sackville: The Government believe that tobacco advertising does have an effect on consumption. This is why successive Governments over the last 22 years have controlled tobacco advertising by a system of voluntary agreements. The Government have not made any estimate of the effect of tobacco advertising on teenagers compared to the effect on the population as a whole.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region and by date of closure all former NHS hospitals closed since 1986 and their current use.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Animal Diseases

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action she proposes to monitor the re-emergence in the United Kingdom of previously eliminated diseases, following the free movement of animals;

(2) if she will hold immediate talks with the Minister of Agriculture about methods of preventing the re-emergence of brucellosis in rural constituencies.

Mr. Sackville: Though brucellosis in humans is not a statutorily notifiable disease, there is a laboratory reporting system which receives between 10 and 30 reports each year. The Department works closely with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on all aspects of brucellosis and other diseases which can be transmitted from animals to humans including their prevention. This liaison takes full account of all developments including the free movement of animals.

Medical Records

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals charge other hospitals for X-rays and other medical records for patients who transfer between hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been filed under the clinical complaints procedure against hospitals neglecting to pass on to third parties medical records of patients treated by them.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Dental Services, Wandsworth

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists working in the London borough of Wandsworth provide full NHS dental services at the latest convenient date.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Hypnotherapy

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce measures to regulate hypnotherapists and related practitioners.

Mr. Sackville: None. We welcome, however, the efforts of reputable training institutes in hypnotherapy, as in other areas of complementary therapy, to develope standards of training, voluntary registration and certification of hypnotherapists.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private residential care homes were inspected in the Greater London area in each of the last three years.

Mr. Bowis: The inspection of private and voluntary residential care homes is the responsibility of local authorities under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Clinical Complaints Procedure

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the operation of the clinical complaints procedure.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 13 June at columns 552-53 the setting up of a review of the national health service complaints procedures. All aspects of national health service complaints procedures, including the clinical complaints procedure, are being examined and a report is expected in the new year.

Credit Approvals

Mr. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what credit approvals she is making available for personal social services for 1994-95.

Mr. Bowis: Basic credit approvals of £114·2 million and supplementary credit approvals (SCAs) of £26·1 million will be available for the personal social services for 1994-95. The total of £140·3 million is an increase of 2·0 per cent. in real terms on 1993-94. SCAs will again be available for information technology for community care (£12·2 million), mental illness (£10·9 million) and AIDS/HIV services (£3 million). Annual capital guidelines will be £121·2 million.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many expressions of interest she has approved for the fifth wave of NHS trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have given permission to eight units to prepare National Health Service trust applications in the fifth wave. They are as listed. Further expressions of interest are expected. This wave of NHS trusts will mean that the separation of organisations responsible for the purchasing and providing of hospital and community health services could be virtually complete from April 1995.

The expressions of interest are as follows:

West Midlands regional health authority
Solihull Hospital (withdrew application in the fourth wave);
Wolverhampton Primary Healthcare;
South Birmingham Acute;

Trent regional health authority
Fosse Health (Glenfrith Unit);

South West Thames regional health authority
Pathfinder (Wandsworth Mental Health);

North East Thames regional health authority
Essex and Herts Community;
Essex and Herts Acute;
Homerton.

A complete list of those directly managed units not awaiting decisions in the fourth wave has been placed in the Library. This list updates information my hon. Friend the Minister for Health gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 16 June 1993 at columns 617-18.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the NHS Supplies Agency has achieved since it was set up; and what savings it has achieved for the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Since it was established, the National Health Service Supplies Authority has brought together over 70 separate local supplies organisations, providing better value for money for its NHS customers.

Better buying has already achieved savings of £60 million, and a further £25 million of savings are targeted by March 1994.

Operating costs have been reduced by about £15 million through a 10 per cent. reduction in staffing, closure of unnecessary stores, and rationalisation of information technology and other services. Service efficiency has improved in terms of faster order responses and stock turnover, and better financial and management control.

These improvements mean that more resources are now available for patient care.

Support Tights

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will add support tights to items available on prescription.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. General practitioners are already able to prescribe a suitable range of compression hosiery.

Asthma

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths from asthma occurred in each district health authority in England, and in total, in the latest available year.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are used in the selection of the chair and the executive members of (a) NHS trusts, (b) regional health authorities, (c) district health authorities and (d) family health authorities in respect of relevant experience and qualifications; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Chairmen of health authorities and national health service trusts are appointed for their personal qualities, knowledge and skills and for the contribution they can bring to the strategic leadership of their authority or trust. The selection of executive members of health authorities and executive directors of trusts is a matter for each individual health body.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) family health service authorities and (d) NHS trusts; what guidelines she has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The maximum number of board members of regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities and national health service trusts is eleven. The composition of NHS authorities and trusts is laid down in the Regional and District Health Authorities (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990, the Family Health Services Authorities (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990, and the NHS Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990. These requirements are summarised in guidance issued to authorities and trusts.

Chairmen of regional health authorities have been asked to make efforts to increase the proportion of women appointed as chairmen and non-executive members of NHS authorities and trusts under the Opportunity 2000 programme. Ministers have also reminded RHA chairmen that they are committed to appointing able people from ethnic minorities as chairmen and non-executive members of NHS authorities and trusts. There is no specific guidance on the number of appointments from particular groups.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what her Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if she will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The names of suitable candidates for appointment as chairmen and non-executive members of health authorities and national health service trusts come from a variety of sources. These may include nominations resulting from the use by regional health authorities of executive search consultants. Those who are appointed to health authority or trust boards are appointed for their personal skills and qualities. No details are available centrally on the use of consultants for such appointments.

The use of executive search consultants for appointment to executive, advisory and tribunal non-departmental public bodies is an option but to date we have not used any such services. The Department's aim is to appoint people from a broad range of different backgrounds. Many professional and voluntary bodies are consulted when appointments are made to public bodies.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total numbers of chairpersons and non-executive board members of (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) family health service authorities and (d) national health service trusts in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers of chairmen and the maximum number of non-executive members of health authorities and national health service trusts are shown in the table. Fourth wave NHS trusts are not included in these figures.

Body	Number of chairmen posts	Number of non-executive members/directors posts
Regional health authorities	14	70
District health authorities	141	705
Family health services authorities	90	810
NHS trusts	292	1,440

Evening Daylight

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has undertaken as to the likely improvements in the nation's health which would be afforded by an extra hour's evening daylight for outdoor sport and recreation.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press releases her Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: Information for the years 1979 to 1988 is not available.

The number of press releases issued from 1989 are as follows:

Year	Number
1989	575
1990	632
1991	638
1992	471
[1]1993	651

[1] To 13 December.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of advertising by her Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Sackville: Information for the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 is not available. Annual spend for the financial years 1985-86 to 1992-93 is:

	£ million
1985-86	3·106
1986-87	7·969
1987-88	6·494
1988-89	3·724
1989-90	7·280
1990-91	4·797
1991-92	8·058
1992-93	5·053

Spend to date for 1993-94 is £885,000, a monthly breakdown is not available.

Past campaigns have included drug and solvent misuse, organ donation, health of the nation, patients charter and blood donor recruitment.

Patient Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will update the table provided on 4 November, Official Report, column 459, on patient complaints, to include 1992-93 figures.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not yet available centrally.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average estimated cost of one day's sickness absence within the national health service;

(2) what was the total number of days sickness absence within the national health service for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Cornwall Community Healthcare Trust

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department will bear the cost of defending the unfair dismissal case brought by the former chairman of the Cornwall Community healthcare trust, Admiral Sir Godfrey Milton-Thompson, and of the ex gratia settlement to him.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have already done so.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department will defend any action brought by the former chairman of the Cornwall community healthcare trust, Mrs. Abigail Kirby-Harris, and will be prepared to entertain any claim made by her.

Dr. Mawhinney: No action has been filed against the Department by Mrs. Abigail Kirby-Harris. We see no reason why it should be.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure by her Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by her Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in 1992-93 prices; and what is her estimate for expenditure on administration by her Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are shown in the table.

	1992-93 £ million	1993-94 £ million
Cash	276	265
At 1992-93 prices	276	257

Planned expenditure for 1994-95 will be published in the unified Budget supplement.

Sick Pay

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the changes in the Budget on sick pay will cost the national health service for its own staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: A precise estimate of the effect of this change has not been made. The £1·6 billion the Government have given the national health service over original plans for 1993-94 allows for an overall assessment of the effect of this and other cost pressures on the health service. It is not helpful to identify specific sums for individual pressures the size of which will vary from hospital to hospital. Provided pay rises are earned through increased efficiency the hospital and community health service will be able to treat around 4 per cent. more patients next year.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the number of appeals against council tax property banding, (b) the number rejected and (c) the number submitted subsequently to the appeals tribunal and the number of those granted.

Mr. Baldry: As regards the first part of his question, I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning gave to the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on 15 December 1993.

As regards the remainder, proposals from taxpayers for amendment of bandings are transmitted to valuation tribunals at the end of six months, unless in the meantime they have been withdrawn or agreement has been reached in discussions between the Valuation Office Agency and the taxpayer. The Valuation Office Agency will however continue such discussions even after transmission to the valuation tribunal with the aim of achieving a satisfactory settlement. Only where this proves impossible is a case heard by a valuation tribunal.

By 30 November 1993, 500,210 proposals had been transmitted in this way to valuation tribunal offices, and 62 had been the subject of a tribunal hearing. Information on the decisions of individual tribunals is not collected centrally.

Environmental Protection (Grants)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regional aid grants for protection and data collection on the environment have been awarded in the current year by the European Commission to county, district or metropolitan local authorities in 1993.

Mr. Baldry: Funds are available from the European Community for protection and data collection on the environment. However, the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Gummer: My Department spent the following amounts on heating fuel during the financial years indicated:

	Gas £	Oil [illegible]	Total £
1990-91	221,896	409,261	631,157
1991-92	267,651	298,658	566,309
1992-93	354,897	168,736	523,633

These figures exclude expenditure on the royal parks and palaces which transferred from my Department in 1992.

Total figures for 1989-90 and individual figures for offices since 1990-91 to date can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sellafield (Emissions)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what stage Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was informed of the revised figures for plutonium emissions from Sellafield prepared by British Nuclear Fuels' corporate environmental adviser; what action Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution intends to take in the light of these revised figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) received a copy of the expert evidence prepared by Professor Stephen Jones of BNFL on 9 November 1992. This reassessment of historical discharges has no impact on current operations at Sellafield and HMIP will not be taking any action in the light of this information.

Habitats

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his plans for implementation of the EC habitats and species directive will give protection to important wildlife sites additional to that provided under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Yeo: All land-based sites designated as special areas of conservation under the EC habitats directive will have already been designated as SSSIs and subject to the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. Additional measures required to meet the site protection requirements of the EC habitats directive, including those required for conservation of the marine environment, are set out in the Government's public consultation paper, a copy of which is in the House Library.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 189, whether he has committed his Department to regular meetings with the statutory nature conservation bodies specifically on the transposition of the EC habitats and species directive since 16 November.

Mr. Yeo: My Department is in continual contact with the statutory nature conservation agencies about the EC habitats directive. Regular meetings and frequent ad hoc contacts will continue as work on transposition proceeds.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to implement those parts of the EC habitats directive relating to favourable conservation status outside protected areas such as sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Yeo: We already have in place a number of policies and programmes to promote the conservation of wildlife in the wider countryside, for example, environmentally sensitive areas, countryside stewardship, species recovery programmes, forestry policies. These will be taken forward in the context of the biodiversity action plan to be published in January after the House returns.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will appoint a lead agency in each country to oversee the implementation of the EC habitats and species directive.

Mr. Yeo: The Government are responsible for implementation of the EC habitats directive, advised by the relevant country Nature Conservation Agency (English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage, or the Countryside Council for Wales). Amendments to the powers and duties of Government, the nature conservation agencies and other bodies thought necessary to secure full implementation of the directive, were set out in the Government's recent public consultation paper, the responses to which are being considered. A copy of the consultation paper has been deposited in the House Library.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to safeguard threatened peatbogs under the EC habitats and species directive.

Mr. Yeo: A number of peatland habitat types are listed on annex I of the EC habitats directive, signifying that they are habitat types of Community interest whose conservation requires the designation of special areas of conservation (SACs).

The Joint Nature Conservation Committee and the country nature conservation agencies are currently working on their advice on the national list of sites to be submitted to the Commission by June 1995. It is too early to name sites likely to appear on this list, but peatland sites will be included in accordance with the directive's criteria.

As stated in the consultation paper issued on 4 October, the Government is committed to introducing regulations to implement the directive, including the site protection requirements of article 6.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the revenue support grant paid over annually to metropolitan councils to support public transport projects in passenger transport authorities areas since 1989.

Mr. Baldry: Revenue support grant is paid to local authorities to help meet general revenue expenditure. It is based on an assessment of each authority's overall need to spend in order to provide a standard level of service known as the standard spending assessment or SSA. It is distributed so that, if all authorities were to spend at the level of their SSA, they could set broadly the same level of council tax, for properties in a given valuation band.

The grant is not intended to be used in any prescribed way, it is not, therefore, possible to identify a particular portion of the total grant as being related to any particular type of service.

Irish Sea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received on the reconnaissance marine aggregrate resource assessment of the Irish sea conducted by the Crown estate.

Mr. Yeo: The Crown estate commissioned the British Geological Survey (BGS) to undertake a desk study of information on marine aggregate resources on an area in the Irish sea and BGS has recently published the results of this study. A copy has been sent to my Department.

Unitary Local Authorities

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new unitary authorities he plans to create; and how many will straddle review areas.

Mr. Baldry: This information will not be available until the Local Government Commission has made recommendations to my right hon. Friend about local government structure for all the shire counties of England; and Parliament has approved all the orders, to be made under section 17 of the Local Government Act 1992, giving effect to those recommendations.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make York and Harrogate unitary local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission is due to complete its final report to my right hon. Friend on the structure of local government in Humberside, Lincolnshire and North Yorkshire by 23 January 1994. Once the commission has published its report, my right hon. Friend will consider its recommendations and any representations which he receives about them, before taking any decision about the future structure of local government in North Yorkshire.

Biodiversity

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to monitor the implementation of the biodiversity action plan and national sustainability strategy and to review arrangements where necessary.

Mr. Yeo: We aim to publish our biodiversity action plan and our sustainable development strategy after the House reassembles in the new year. Those documents will outline arrangements for implementation and monitoring.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom biodiversity action plan is due to be published after the House returns in January.

Passenger Transport

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local services are funded by a precept.

Mr. Baldry: Services provided by county councils, metropolitan police authorities, fire and civil defence authorities, and local precepting authorities, such as parish councils, may be the subject of precepts.

Green Research

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to support collaborative research work with the winners of the Green Initiative awards supported by the Local Government Chronicle to assist their commercial implementation.

Mr. Yeo: I was very pleased to be able to present the awards and certificates to the winners of Green Initiative sponsored by KPMG and the Local Government Chronicle, and my Department will be happy to continue its support for the 1994 competition. We have no plans jointly to commission research with the winners, though we shall be interested to follow the progress of their schemes.

Seals

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest estimates by the sea mammals research unit of the numbers of grey and common seals in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: The estimates for 1992 are 9,700 grey seals and 1,700 common seals in England and Wales.

Cryptosporidium

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the findings of the scientific report into cryptosporidium.

Mr. Yeo: The drinking water inspectorate has completed its assessment of two incidents, in March-April 1992 and October-November 1992, involving the detection of low levels of cryptosporidium in the water supplied from Broadfields treatment works, Isle of Wight. The inspectorate will be writing shortly to Southern Water Services Ltd. setting out its conclusions and recommendations on each incident. Copies of these letters will be sent to the local authorities, district health authorities and customer service committee concerned, to the Office of Water Services and others who have expressed an interest. I will send the hon. Member copies.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of (a) urban development corporations, (b) housing action trusts and (c) the Housing Corporation; what guidelines he has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many board members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions;

(2) what are the minimum and maximum numbers of board members of English Partnerships; what guidelines he has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many board members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions.

Mr. Baldry: Schedule 26 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, Schedule 6 of the Housing Associations Act 1985, Schedule 7 of the Housing Act 1988 and Schedule 17 of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 set out the statutory requirements for making appointments to urban development corporations, the Housing Corporation, housing action trusts and English Partnerships (Urban Regeneration Agency), respectively.

The minimum number of board members required, by statute, by an urban development corporation is a chairman and deputy chairman and five members, the maximum is a chairman and deputy chairman and 11 members. The minimum number of board members required, by statute, by a housing action trust is a chairman and five members, the maximum is a chairman and 11 members. The maximum number of board members required by the Housing Corporation is 15. The minimum number of board members required, by statute, for English Partnerships is six, including a chairman; no maximum number is specified.

Appointments to my Department's public bodies are made from people of all backgrounds and walks of life. In the light of the founding legislation for urban development corporations and housing action trusts, local business people and local authority members are commonly appointed to these boards.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used in the selection of the chair and the executive members of (a) the Housing Corporation, (b) English Partnerships and (c) the urban development corporations, in respect of relevant experience and qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: When making appointments to the boards of these bodies my right hon. Friend has regard to the range of skills and expertise necessary for the boards to carry out their functions effectively.

Climate Change

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the United Kingdom "Strategy to Limit Climate Change".

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) on 3 December 1993 at column 764.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government intend to ratify (a) the biodiversity convention and (b) the climate change convention agreed at Rio de Janeiro in June 1992.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 2 December 1993 at column 654 and to the hon. Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) on 3 December 1993 at column 764.

Central European Time

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate his Department has made of the likely effect of a move to central European time on energy consumption and consequently on carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Yeo: It is estimated but subject to considerable uncertainty that a change to single double summer time (i.e. GMT+1 in the winter and GMT+2 in summer) might slightly increase overall energy consumption and result in extra CO_2 emissions of up to 0·1 million tonnes of carbon a year.

Conservation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a statutory provision to provide for the production of management plans for all designated special areas for conservation.

Mr. Yeo: The EC habitats directive requires member states to establish appropriate management plans for special areas of conservation if need be. The statutory nature conservation agencies' powers to formulate management plans will be available for designated special areas of conservation, and the Government will encourage formulation of such plans wherever they will benefit the nature conservation interest of the area.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan is intended to implement the Government's commitment made at the United Nations conference on environment and development to environmental education for sustainable development.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom biodiversity action plan, which is due to be published after the House returns in January, will contain a strategy for the conservation and enhancement of species. A component of this strategy will be the important role of environmental education.

Albemarle Children's Home

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will refer to the district auditor the case of the London borough of Bromley and the Albemarle children's home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No. My right hon. Friend has no powers to take such action. Representations should be made direct to the district auditor.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Gummer: The cash figures requested for my Department are as follows:

	£ million
1992-93	278
1993-94	280
1994-95	285

The GDP deflators required to calculate real terms figures are shown on page 121 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95" (HC 31), copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Housing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures of the number of permanent dwellings started by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations each year from 1978 to 1993 and the estimates for the number of permanent dwellings in each category to be started each year from 1994 to 1996 under current provisions for public sector housing investment.

Sir George Young: Estimates of housebuilding starts for England are shown in the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for each year from 1982 to 1992 are in table 6.1(a) of the 1982 to 1992 annual edition. Figures for 1978 to 1981 are in the same table of the editions for earlier years: 1980 and 1981 figures are in the 1980-1990 edition; 1978 and 1979 figures are in the 1978-1988 edition. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

The Department does not predict the number of houses to be built by local authorities or by housing associations.

Tenants' Rights

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish for consultation the regulations governing the operation of the new right to compensation for tenants' improvements in the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, have today published for consultation the regulations governing the operation of the compensation for tenants' improvement scheme. The views of local government, housing organisations and other interested parties are being sought on the detailed operation of a new mandatory scheme whereby local authority tenants can receive compensation for carrying out worthwhile home improvements, once their tenancy ends. The scheme will apply to improvements begun after 1 April next year. In line with the citizens charter this new right will benefit all council tenants, and provide them with a valuable incentive to improve their homes.

The powers to establish this new scheme in England and Wales are contained in section 122 of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be consulting on a similar scheme in Scotland. Copies of the draft regulations will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the overall cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. Gummer: The overall cost to the Department of the Environment for their Ministers' car service was estimated at £270,000 in 1990-91. Eight cars were provided by the Government car service with drivers and full backup services.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spends annually on (a) television advertising; (b) radio advertising and (c) press advertising; and what were the corresponding figures for 1985 and 1979.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the answer of 9 December 1993, column 362]: I regret that the figures contained in my earlier answer were incorrect. The correct information is as follows.

In the financial year 1992-93, the Department spent £2,716,974·74 on press advertising and £4,212,673·15 on television advertising. These costs include creative and production charges, value added tax, and other levies as paid.

The main campaigns were:

Helping the Earth Begins at Home
Right to Buy
Council Tax Press Advertising March 1993
Making a Corporate Commitment—to Energy Saving
Halon Banking
EMAS—Energy Management Assistance Scheme

There was no expenditure on radio advertising in that financial year.

A breakdown of publicity advertising is not available for the years 1985 and 1979.

Radon Gas

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available about levels of radon gas in workplaces in radon-affected areas; what powers are available to local authorities to limit exposure to radon gas in the workplace; and what guidance has been issued.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety Executive—HSE—commissions the National Radiological Protection Board—NRPB—to carry out research into the level of radon gas in workplaces in radon-affected areas, and reports of this work are produced. The NRPB also publish results of its own research.

HSE and local authority inspectors use their normal powers under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to ensure compliance with the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985. These set limits on occupational exposure to radon gas and require exposures to be kept as low as reasonably practicable.

The HSE issued and widely circulated a free leaflet in July 1992 entitled "Radon in the Workplace", copies of which are available in the Library. Inspectors have fuller information which they issue to employers whose workplaces may be affected by radon.

TRANSPORT

Ashford International Station

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to make an announcement about Ashford international passenger station.

Mr. MacGregor: I am delighted to announce that the construction of Ashford international passenger station is to go ahead as a privately financed project. European Passenger Services has now signed agreements with John Laing plc whereby Laing will construct the station buildings and car parks, at its own cost and risk, and will in return receive from EPS a fee for each passenger using the station.

The whole station is now expected to be completed in 1995, together with the associated railway works which I announced on 22 March.

Merchant Navy (Homosexuality)

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to repeal section 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 to decriminalise homosexual acts in the Merchant Navy.

Mr. Norris: Yes, having consulted widely on this matter and considered all the factors involved, I have decided that there is no continued justification for the retention of offences specific to the Merchant Navy. Section 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 will therefore be repealed when a suitable legislative opportunity occurs.

Rail Services

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Government funding has been paid annually to district councils to support rail services under section 20 of the Transport Act 1968.

Mr. Freeman: Assistance to local authority programmes is given through revenue support grant paid by the Department of the Environment. An amount is set aside within the "All other services" block for distribution to district councils in the six English metropolitan county areas in view of their responsibility for supporting local rail services. The amounts for the last four years are:

Year	£ million
1990-91	77
1991-92	93
1992-93	105
1993-94	110

The equivalent figure for 1994-95 is £112·9 million.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what meetings he has had with the Freight Transport Association in regard to the impact on refrigerated transport of Her Majesty's Government's policy of phasing out CFC use in refrigeration systems by 1 January 1996.

Mr. Key: None.

Road Noise

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce type approval legislation governing the level of road noise produced by motorway road surfaces.

Mr. Key: I have no plans to introduce type approval legislation governing the level of road noise produced by motorway road surfaces. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 13 December, Official Report, column 467.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of accidents per mile of United Kingdom motorway and the equivalent figure for each other EC country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Comparable data for EC countries are only available for fatalities. The table shows the number of fatalities per 100 miles of motorway for each of the EC countries.

Fatalities per 100 miles of motorway, EC countries 1991

	Fatalities per 100 miles of motorway
Belgium	7·7
Denmark	1·9
France	5·9
Germany	8·8
Irish Republic	2·6
Italy	7·4
Luxemburg[1]	—
Netherlands	3·4
Portugal	18·8
Spain	16·1
United Kingdom	4·7
EC TOTAL[2]	7·7

[1] Data not available for Luxemburg.

[2] Excluding Luxemburg.

Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decision he has made on changing the basis for the payment of light dues for 1994-95 from net to gross tonnage.

Mr. Norris: Light dues are currently assessed on the net registered tonnage of the vessel. In 1990, the then Secretary of State for Transport announced to the House the Government's decision in principle to change to a gross tonnage assessment from April 1994.

I have decided not to proceed with such a change at this stage. However the standard tonnage assessment under the International Convention on Tonnage Measurement 1969 —ICT 69—will be fully implemented in July 1994. Further evidence collected by Trinity House suggests that some vessels would face a substantial increase in light dues if the final introduction of ICT 69 measurement followed closely on a move to gross tonnage assessment. Accordingly, I have decided to allow the change to ICT 69 measurement to take place and will monitor the results. This will permit a more accurate analysis of the effects on light dues of a move to gross tonnage. I shall then give further consideration to the possibility of a change to gross tonnage assessment.

Air Navigation Services

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what United Kingdom airlines will be charged for air navigation services in 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The charges for air navigation services in 1994 are set out in the Civil Aviation (Route Charges for Navigation Services) (Second Amendment) Regulations 1993. A copy of the regulations was laid before the House on 10 December.

It was necessary to revoke the Civil Aviation (Route Charges for Navigation Services) (Amendment) Regulations 1993, laid before the House on 6 December, before they came into force as the result of a very late change by France to their charges. I am happy to say that this last minute change, as shown in the second amendment to these regulations, was to the benefit of airspace users.

Several of the member states of Eurocontrol have reduced their charges, and I am pleased to say that the United Kingdom's charge will fall by nearly 4 per cent. in sterling terms, or 9·5 per cent. in ecu. I know that this will be welcomed by the airlines, and it reflects well on the Civil Aviation Authority's control of its own costs that a reduction is possible at a time when it is investing to meet the airlines' future needs.

Air Traffic Control Delays

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of air traffic control delays in the summers of (a) 1992 and (b) 1993; and what steps have been taken by the Civil Aviation Authority to improve the position on delays.

Mr. Norris: I am glad to say that this summer delays have been significantly less than last year. Delays to traffic leaving the United Kingdom have been reduced from an average of 11 minutes throughout summer 1992 to seven minutes over the same period of this year. There has been an even greater improvement for domestic traffic, with a decrease in the average delay for early morning flights to London from 20 minutes to four minutes over the same period. The number of outward bound flights delayed by more than an hour was decreased by 37 per cent., numbering typically 100 out of a total of some 7,500 flights a week. Delays to flights inbound to the United Kingdom have fallen from an average of 16 minutes in 1992 to 10 minutes in 1993. The service to airlines has been improved with the time taken to respond to requests for take-off "slots" reduced from 24 minutes to 14 minutes.

These improvements reflect hard work by the CAA to provide increased airspace capacity, both through procedural measures and capital investment.

The authority's investment programme continues to make good progress with the successful transfer in October of the Heathrow and Gatwick approach control functions to the new central control function operations room at the London air traffic control centre at West Drayton. The authority's £340 million new air traffic control centre at Swanwick, Hampshire, due to be completed in 1996, continues on time and on budget.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the availability and response of search and rescue services in Shetland to the recent incidents involving Klondykers, with particular reference to the Lunohods 1 on 9 November and the Borodinskye Poyle on 15 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We are indeed satisfied with the availability and response of the search and rescue services in general and in particular those in the Shetlands. In the case of the Lunohods 1 and Borodinskye Poyle the magnificent and heroic efforts of the crew of the coastguard helicopter and the Lerwick RNLI lifeboat are of special note, together with the invaluable support of coastguard response teams, the Royal Air Force, Royal Navy, the offshore industry including a Norwegian infield helicopter, and the merchant vessels. All of these services, professionally and expertly co-ordinated by the Shetland coastguard maritime rescue sub-centre, worked together to save the lives of all 60 crew of the Lunohods 1 and all 74 crew of the Borodinskye Poyle.

Without doubt, these incidents were conducted in the best traditions of the United Kingdom search and rescue services and deserving of the highest praise for all those involved.

British Rail

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the privatisation of British Rail's infrastructure service activities.

Mr. Freeman: I have today approved proposals from the British Railways Board for the restructuring and sale of its infrastructure service activities.

From next April, British Rail will operate a new division—British Rail Infrastructure Services—BRIS—which will contract with Railtrack and the train operating companies to provide infrastructure maintenance, renewal and associated services. BRIS will be restructured during 1994-95 to set up two major groups of companies. One group will provide infrastructure maintenance services and the other will undertake renewal and other capital schemes. Other BRIS activities, for example design services, will also be established as companies. The companies will be sold during 1995 and the early part of 1996. BR's aim is to complete the transfer of the companies to the private sector by April 1996.

Transferring these companies to the private sector and opening up the infrastructure supply market will ensure the competitive and efficient supply of infrastructure services to the rail industry.

Red Star Parcels

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an announcement on the future of Red Star Parcels.

Mr. Freeman: Today, the British Railways Board announced, with the agreement of the Government, that it will be withdrawing the sale of Red Star as no satisfactory offers for the business have been received. The board will now seek urgently to prepare a new management plan for Red Star, with a view to achieving financial viability and successful disposal in 1994.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Norris: Appointments made by my right hon. Friend since 1992 which had been advertised are the Rail Regulator and the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising, both of whom head non-ministerial Government departments, and the Scottish Traffic Commissioner.

The post of deputy traffic commissioner for the west midlands and south Wales traffic areas was advertised recently, but an appointment has not yet been made.

Like other employers, we also advertise some internal posts.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Norris: The Department's policy is to use executive search consultants wherever this is thought necessary to obtain a wide field of suitable candidates for important full-time appointments or high profile part-time appointments, in particular where it has not been possible to identify suitable candidates from the public appointments unit's list or other sources.

In 1992, executive search consultants were used to identify candidates to serve initially as advisors on regulation and franchising and then, subject to parliamentary approval of the Railways Bill, to take up appointment as the Rail Regulator and Director of Passenger Rail Franchising. At the same time, the consultants were asked to search for candidates for two appointments to the BR board, subsequently combined into one. The cost of search for candidates for the posts was £103,428 for fees, expenses and VAT, plus £28,670 for advertising costs.

Consultants were also used by London Transport in 1992 in the search for candidates for appointment to the board as chief executive. The cost of this was borne by LT and is a matter for them.

A41

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much expenditure there has been on roadworks on the A41 between Spur road and the Finchley road garage in the last five years.

In addition, £800,000 per annum is spent on routine and minor maintenance works.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for further improvements to the A41 between Spur road and the Finchley road garage after 1994.

Mr. Norris: Subject to availability of resources, the following improvements and substantial maintenance schemes are currently planned over the three years from April 1994, for the A41 between A410 Spur road and A598 Finchley road, including the A1 Barnet bypass.

They will be programmed to cause the minimum of disruption and inconvenience.

Before 1984, issue of press notices was a common service of the Department of Transport, Environment and Property Services Agency and information concerning the number of press notices issued separately on transport is not available.

Railtrack

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those positions so far filled on the staff of Railtrack, with salary in each case.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters of management for the British Railways Board while Railtrack is still part of BR.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. MacGregor: The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running my Department in 1992-93 is £386 million.

The running costs provision for my Departments, including the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency; the forthcoming Highways, Marine Safety and Marine Emergencies agencies; the new Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the new Office of the Rail Regulator, for 1993-94 is £433 million in cash, and £420 million in 1992-93 prices. An estimated outturn will be published in the spring in the 1994 departmental report and the unified Budget supplement.

My Departments' planned running costs expenditure for 1994-95 will be published in the unified Budget supplement and in the Department's annual report which will be issued in the spring.

Automatic Train Protection

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Tranport what is his policy towards the system known as automatic train protection.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is evaluating the technical trials, costs and benefits of automatic train protection systems. I understand that British Rail expects to reach conclusions on the results of that work by the spring. I shall review ATP policy with British Rail and Railtrack in the light of those conclusions and of advice from the Health and Safety Commission.

A205, Catford

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will take a decision on the start of the scheme to improve the A205 Catford town centre.

Mr. Norris: I will make an announcement on the A205 Catford town centre improvement scheme early next year.

Railway Rolling Stock

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has completed its appraisal of the north Yorkshire passenger transport executive bid for new rolling stock for the electrified Leeds-Bradford line; and if he will make a statement on the current position with regard to this order.

Mr. Freeman: The appraisal is still under discussion between my Department and West Yorkshire passenger transport executive. We have not yet had from the PTE all the information we need to enable us to reach a conclusion. We hope to reach a conclusion quickly once all the information is made available.

British Rail Employees

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are employed in each division of British Rail on salaries of £30,000 or more at a recent convenient date.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail advises that, as of 15 December 1993, 1,337 people out of a total payroll of 128,800 were employed at salaries of £30,000 or more. This represents 1.04 per cent. of the work force. Further information in the form requested is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Child Road Deaths

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect on the incidence of child road deaths of the United Kingdom adopting double British summer time.

Mr. Key: Based on 1991 road accident data, the Transport Research Laboratory has estimated that a total of 29 fatalities, 125 serious injuries and 140 slight injuries to children under the age of 16 could be saved in Great Britain if double British summer time were adopted.

Buses, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given, as a part of the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the organisation Keeping London First, to requiring operators of private bus companies bidding for future bus route franchise contracts with London Transport to retain a standard form of bus livery or permitted variation thereof.

Mr. Norris: I am aware of the support which has been expressed for the retention of a red livery for buses in London. LT has no current plans to require private bus operators to conform to a standardised bus livery.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Children (Statistics)

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security further to his reply of 2 December 1993, Official Report, column 720, if he will now show (a) the numbers of United Kingdom families with children and (b) the numbers of United Kingdom children dependent on supplementary benefit and income support in 1979, 1989 and 1992 and the percentages of (i) United Kingdom families with children and (ii) United Kingdom children involved.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table and is for Great Britain only.

Year	Number of families in receipt of supplementary benefit/income support	As a percentage of families in receipt of child benefit	Number of dependants of supplementary benefit/income support recipients	As a percentage of Great Britain population under 19
1979	488,000	6·8	955,000	6·3
1989	1,144,000	17·2	2,138,000	15·8
1992	1,500,000	21·9	2,874,000	21·3

Notes:

1. Sources: Supplementary Benefit/Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiries November 1979, May 1989, May 1992.
Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys.
Social Security Statistics.
2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand. Percentages are correct to one decimal place.
3. The number of families in receipt of child benefit has been used as an estimate of the number of families with dependent children in Great Britain.
4. The number of dependent children is expressed as a percentage of the resident population of Great Britain of the same age group; ie: under 19. Some of these people will be living independently and may receive supplementary benefit/income support in their own right.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Hague: Information is not available in the form requested.

Records showing expenditure on heating for individual buildings for the past four years are not held.

Before April 1991 fuel and utility charges for the Government estate were met by the Property Services Agency.

Since 1991 we have, in common with other Government Departments, provided to the Department of the Environment's energy efficiency office the following total expenditure on energy:

Year	£
1990-91	12,515,493
1991-92	14,213,000
1992-93	15,600,000

Details of energy expenditure for the year to date are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases have been dealt with by the Child Support Agency since its inception from the Warrington, South constituency.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Ros Hepplewhite, the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency, that information in the form requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, a report showing the agency's national performance is available each month in the Library.

Unemployed People (Mortgages)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to limit payments to unemployed people in respect of very large mortgages.

Mr. Burt: Help for mortgage loans is given through income support. A limit of £150,000 was introduced on 2 August 1993. This limit will be reduced to £125,000 from 11 April 1994.

Savings (Tariff Rates)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the tariff rates for savings in respect of claimants on income support and other related benefits.

Mr. Burt: In all the income-related benefits, capital up to £3,000 is ignored. The formula applied for capital above this figure does not imply any particular return on investments. It ensures that help is targeted on those who need it most, while not denying benefit to those with only a moderate amount of capital. The rules are kept under review, but we have no plans for change.

Pensions

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women he estimates will lose five years of pension as a result of his Budget, for each year from 2010 to 2020.

Mr. Hague: No women reaching state pension age before 6 March 2020 will lose five years of pension as a result of the changes announced on 30 November 1993.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of unemployment benefit in the next 12 months; and what was the cost in 1979.

Mr. Burt: The estimated cost of unemployment benefit for 1994-95 is given in table 1 of the social security departmental report as £1·9 billion.

The cost of unemployment benefit in 1979-80 was £653 million.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992;

(2) which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Hague: The use of executive search consultants is one of a number of options which may be considered in making appointments to public bodies. Since April 1992, no posts have been advertised nor have consultants been used in making any such appointments.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the tables.

	£
Advertising costs in whole years
1989-90	6,799,000
1990-91	4,560,000
1991-92	5,794,000
1992-93	4,517,000
Advertising costs for the last 12 months
December 1992	88,492
January 1993	1,055,229
February	29,840
March	2,800,494
April	12,343
June	1,223,689
July	2,018,378
August	589,155
October	412,129
November	25,498

Notes:

1. The Department of Social Security did not exist independently prior to August 1988.

2. These figures include advertising on behalf of the Department's HQ and executive agencies other than the Benefits Agency (BA). The projected expenditure in 1993-94 for BA is £670,734. A monthly breakdown of this figure is not available. Figures for previous years since 1991-92 (when the agency took over responsibility for expenditure in this area) are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

	Number
1991	187
1992	199
1993[1]	214[2]

[1] Up until 14 December.

[2] This figure includes press releases issued on behalf of executive agencies other than the Benefits Agency.

Notes:

1. The total number of press releases issued by the Benefits Agency between April 1991 and 13 December 1993 is 281. (This figure excludes press releases issued by the local offices of the Benefits Agency).
2. Before 1988 the Department was part of the DHSS and separate figures for Social Security are not available.
3. From 1988 to October 1990 press releases were still processed centrally by the joint Departments and separate figures are not available.

Disability

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for extending the pre-qualification period for disability premium before the commencement of payment; what will be the consequential estimated change in payment to a married couple; if he will list the passported benefits, the waiting period for which would also alter consequential upon any alteration in the waiting period for first payment of disability premium and their weekly value to a married couple; and what will be the estimated changes in Government expenditure under this heading in a full year.

Mr. Burt: The disability premium provides extra help in income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit for the long-term sick and the disabled. The amount of the disability premium for a married couple is currently £26·45 a week, increasing to £27·80 a week from 11 April 1994.

For those claiming these benefits as long-term sick the rules for the disability premium will be changed from April 1995 to reflect the incapacity benefit changes announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 1 December. The highest rate of the new incapacity benefit will act as a passport to the disability premium. Severe disablement allowance will continue to bring entitlement to the disability premium. For those who have no other means of entitlement to the disability premium, the period of incapacity needed to qualify will increase from 28 to 52 weeks and the new definition of work and assessment of incapacity will apply.

Disability living allowance, attendance allowance and mobility supplement are other passporting benefits to the disability premium, which can also be awarded on other grounds—for instance, if the person is registered blind. These routes to the disability premium will not be affected by the incapacity benefit changes.

The estimate of the consequences of the incapacity benefit changes on income-related benefit expenditure for sick and disabled people is not available at present. I will write to the Hon. Gentleman with this information as soon as possible.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many war pensioners have been in receipt of invalidity benefit in each year since 1980; and what is the current figure.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the relationship between invalidity benefit rulings and disabled living allowance.

Mr. Scott: Invalidity benefit and disability living allowance are separate benefits designed to meet different needs. Different rules apply to the award of these benefits. If my hon. Friend has a particular concern in mind, perhaps he would care to write to me about it.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

(i) The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running the Department in 1992-93 is £3,741 million.

(ii) The estimated outturn for 1993-94 is £4,118 million or £3,988 million at 1992-93 prices.

(iii) The Department's planned administration expenditure for 1994-95 is £4,023 million or £3,747 million at 1992-93 prices.

Notes:

The figures at 1992-93 prices were calculated by using the GDP deflator.

The figures do not include the subsidy given in respect of work carried out by local authorities.

The figues in (iii) were agreed in the 1993 Public Expenditure Survey. These will be published in the 1994 Departmental Report, but, in the meantime, may need to be revised to take into account any subsequent transfers.

Child Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many powers were conferred on him by the Child Support Act 1993.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Act 1991 confers some 150 powers on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, many of them reflecting previous arrangements under social security legislation. About 80 per cent. of these powers provide for making regulations or orders and are in many cases procedural. The remainder cover straightforward administrative matters.

VAT on Fuel

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out details of the new rates of benefits proposed from April 1994 and the details of help to be made available to meet the cost of VAT on domestic fuel.

Mr. Lilley [pursuant to his reply, 30 November 1993, columns 437-50]: The information given in the schedule contained two typographical errors.

Column 440:

The figure of "£139·99" quoted in relation to alternative maximum council tax benefit second adult on income support—second adults gross income: should read "£138·99".

Column 448:
The entry for contracted out deductions should read:
"Contracted out deductions (CODs) and increments to CODs (from post-April 1988 earnings)." 1·8 per cent. paid by scheme

NATIONAL FINANCE

Imports And Exports

11. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for imports and exports between the United Kingdom and each of the other countries of the European Union.

Mr. Nelson: In the first nine months of the year, there was a deficit of £0·8 billion in visible trade with other members of the European Union, compared with a deficit of £2·5 billion over the same period in 1992.

Figures for United Kingdom trade with individual members of the Union consistent with these totals will be available shortly.

Christmas Help

12. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policies he will introduce to assist the unemployed people and pensioners in the Southwark and Bermondsey constituency over Christmas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The measures to bring about economic growth and the benefit increases that I was able to announce in my Budget will help pensioners and unemployed people, and not just in Southwark and Bermondsey, but throughout the whole country.

Income Tax

13. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in the east midlands who have previously paid no income tax will now do so as a result of changes announced in the Budget.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1994-95 no one will be brought into income tax as a result of the Budget changes.

Fuel (VAT)

14. Mr. Milligan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received following his measures to help pensioners pay value added tax on fuel.

Sir John Cope: Our decision to add £1·30 a week to the single pension and £1·85 a week to the couples pension by April 1996 to help with fuel bills has been widely welcomed.

26. Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the amount which will be raised in a full year by the imposition of VAT on fuel.

Sir John Cope: VAT on fuel and power is estimated to raise £2,850 million in 1996-97, the first full year of revenue.

18. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue will be raised in the 1993-94 tax year by the changes in the value added tax rate on fuel.

Sir John Cope: Nil.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

15. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the public sector borrowing requirement as a percentage of gross domestic product for each year until 1997-98; and what is the equivalent figure for each other EC country.

Mr. Portillo: The public sector borrowing requirement in the United Kingdom is projected to fall steadily to 1½ per cent. of GDP by 1997-98. Equivalent projections for each other EC country are not available.

Mortgage Interest Payments

16. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate for the reduction in interest payments on an average mortgage since October 1990.

Mr. Nelson: Since October 1990, mortgage rates have been reduced from over 15 per cent. to under 8 per cent., saving a homeowner with an average mortgage £160 a month.

Retail Sales

17. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of retail sales.

Mr. Nelson: In the three months to November, retail sales volumes were over 3½ per cent. higher than a year earlier and at record levels.

Business Taxes

19. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what total payments have been made in each of the last four years to cover return of advance corporation tax or other taxes on dividends or interests to companies or businesses which are either owned by, or are in the control of, foreign Governments under the sovereign immunity arrangement; and in which OECD countries the rates are more favourable to businesses.

Mr. Dorrell: Sovereign immunity from taxation is accorded only to foreign sovereigns and Governments; it does not apply to companies or other separate entities. I regret that I am not clear what information is requested in the second part of the question.

Debt Interest

20. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his estimates of the change in public sector debt interest payments over the next three years as a result of the November Budget; and what estimate he has made as to the effect of the change on the sustainability of Government finances.

Mr. Portillo: By 1996-97, I estimate that debt interest payments will be £1·2 billion lower as a result of the November Budget. The Budget puts the public finances on a sound and sustainable basis.

National Health Service

21. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of total public spending is accounted for by spending on the national health service.

Mr. Portillo: Net NHS expenditure in the United Kingdom is expected to account for 12·5 per cent. of general Government expenditure in 1993-94.

Indirect Taxation

22. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact on the average family's tax bill of the Budget changes in indirect taxation.

24. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact on the average family's tax bill of the Budget changes in indirect taxation.

Sir John Cope: The impact of changes to indirect taxes will depend on the level and pattern of spending by a family and as such any estimates are subject to large margins of error. However, it is estimated that on average the changes in indirect taxation will cost households about 90p per week over the next year relative to indexation.

Value Added Tax

23. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure he has for the number of companies registered for value added tax in the United Kingdom; and what this figure was 12 months ago.

Sir John Cope: The latest available information and that for the 12 months ago is as follows:

Number of companies registered

Date	Number
September 1993	498,750
December 1992	514,085

27. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much VAT was paid by an average family on an income of £200 per week on 9 April 1992; and how much he estimates they will pay on 9 April 1994.

Sir John Cope: Estimates of indirect tax payments outside the range of three-quarters to one-and-a-half times average earnings are not available. A one-earner couple with two children on three-quarters average earnings—£260·80 a week in 1992-93—paid approximately £13·30 a week in VAT. The equivalent figure for 1994-95, in 1992-93 prices, is estimated to be £14·40 a week.

Construction Industry

25. Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to compensate the construction industry, following his decision to cut the annual allocation to the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Portillo: The construction industry's main requirements are for continuing low interest rates and increasing economic confidence. My right hon. and learned Friend's Budget offers decisive action to reduce public sector borrowing. My right hon. and learned Friend has also announced several important new potential projects under the private finance initiative which can provide a boost for construction employment.

Tax Increases

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much he estimates the cumulative tax increases since last March will cost the average family from (a) April 1994 and (b) 1995.

Mr. Dorrell: On average, the main tax related changes will cost households around £5·30 a week from April 1994, and an additional £3·30 a week from April 1995.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if tax is applicable in the occupied royal palaces reserved for (a) the Duke and Duchess of Kent, (b) the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, (c) Princess Alexandra and (d) Prince and Princess Michael of Kent.

Mr. Dorrell: The normal income tax rules apply to living accommodation provided in royal palaces. I am sure the hon. Gentleman will realise that the rules of confidentiality regarding taxpayers' affairs prevent me from commenting on individual cases.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Sir John Cope: The annual fuel heating bills for HM Treasury attributable to the last three years and to date are as follows:

Building	1990-91 £	1991-92 £	1992-93 £	1993-94 £
Great George Street	59,900·00	62,494·00	4,846·00	9,535·00
Alencon Link Basingstoke	6,464,·96	8,877·00	5,521·00	3,759·30
Allington Towers				4,414·11

Prior to 1990-91 utilities on the departmental estate were paid direct by Property Services Agency. These figures are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Interest Rates

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of interest the Government are paying to borrow money; and what has been the rate in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's borrowing programme involves issuing a number of different liabilities, mainly gilts and National Savings products.

The coupons payable on gilts are given in table 3·6 of "Financial Statistics", together with the nominal amount of each issue and the cash received. The supplementary statements to the Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts give further details on an annual basis. For each stock, they indicate the principal outstanding at the beginning and end of the year, the cash received from borrowing and the discount on each stock, repayments, and the interest paid.

A summary measure of the interest rates payable on gilts is provided by the par yields for five, 10 and 20 year gilts in table 13·5 of "Financial Statistics". These show that gilt yields are now at their lowest levels for more than 20 years. The rates on National Savings products are published in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes and in press notices at the time of each interest rate change. The rates are also displayed in Post Offices. A back series of the rates on the investment account is published in "Financial Statistics", table 13·9.

Flight Tax

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he proposes to ensure that air passengers originating in destinations which do not possess through-check-in facilities will not be double-charged flight tax on journeys of more than one leg.

Sir John Cope: Air passenger duty will be collected from airlines. It is expected that they will charge it to customers when the ticket is sold. Customs and Excise are discussing with the airline industry details of the operation of the duty, including arrangements to ensure that the correct amount of duty is charged for passengers on multi-legged journeys.

Petrol Tax

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now introduce measures to compensate for higher duties on petrol and diesel for those parts of the United Kingdom likely to be hardest hit by such increases of duty.

Sir John Cope: No.

Gross National Product

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the predicted size of the gross domestic product and the gross national product is during the current financial year; what they were five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Gross domestic product at current factor cost—1990 prices—was £367 billion in 1978-79, £388 billion in 1983-84, and £470 billion in 1988-89. For the current financial year, 1993-94, it is forecast to be £477 billion.

Gross national product at constant factor cost—1990 prices—was £369 billion in 1978-79, £391 billion in 1983-84, and £475 billion in 1988-89. The Government do not publish a forecast of gross national product.

Value Added Tax

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he makes of the annual revenue which would be forgone as a result of increasing the VAT turnover threshold to £45,000.

Sir John Cope: The revenue cost of raising the VAT registration threshold to £45,000 is estimated to be of the following order:

1993-94 (part year)	1994-95 (full year)	1995-96 (full year)
£5 million	£40 million	£45 million

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the yield from the anti-tax avoidance measures contained in the Budget over the next two years.

Mr. Dorrell: The anti-avoidance measures announced in the Budget will yield an estimated £580 million in 1994-95 and £615 million in 1995-96.

Incomes

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual percentage increase or decrease in real disposable income between (a) 1964 and 1970, (b) 1970 and 1974, (c) 1974 and 1979 and (d) 1979 to the latest available year.

Mr. Nelson: Real personal disposable income has increased in each of these periods. The average annual percentage increases are as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1964-70	2·0
1970-74	3·8
1974-79	2·2
1979-92	2·5

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Nelson: The post of chief executive of the Royal Mint Management Board was advertised using the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency in December 1992.

European Union

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the heads under which the United Kingdom makes regular public expenditure and tax revenue contributions to the European Union and its institutions.

Sir John Cope: In accordance with the "Own Resources Decision", Cm 419, the United Kingdom's gross contribution to the European Community budget is comprised of:

(a) agriculture and sugar levies;
(b) customs duties;
(c) payments on the basis of a harmonized VAT base;
(d) GNP contributions (the fourth resource).

Agricultural and sugar levies and customs duties are paid to the Commission after the deduction of 10 per cent. for collection costs. The United Kingdom's gross contribution is reduced by the abatement arrangements agreed at Fontainebleau in 1984, and set out in the "Own Resources Decision". In addition, the United Kingdom also contributes to the capital of the European investment bank, the European development fund and pays production levies on the import of coal and steel products to the European Coal and Steel Community.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the total and average income tax liability in 1994-95; what these would have been if the 1978-79 regime had been maintained in index-linked form; and if he will give the figures including and excluding national insurance contributions and for men and women separately.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates are in the table. For the purposes of the calculations, the 1978-79 regime has been indexed to 1994-95 by reference to the statutory formula and allowing for independent taxation and applied directly to the income base of 1994-95. In practice, retention of the regime, indexed as appropriate, for the intervening years would have led to changes in the income base.

Controlled Foreign Companies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has, in advance of the publication of the Finance Bill, to publish the changes he proposed in the Budget to the provisions on controlled foreign companies.

Mr. Dorrell: The relevant clause, which is to be included in the forthcoming Finance Bill, is being published today in an Inland Revenue press release. Copies of the clause are being placed in the House of Commons Library.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of revenue to be derived from air passenger duty in the first full financial year in respect of (a) scheduled passenger flights to and from Orkney, (b) scheduled passenger flights to and from Shetland, (c) scheduled passenger flights to and from the western isles and (d) scheduled passenger flights to and from airports operated by Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The total revenue yield from passengers on these routes is expected to be under £2 million.

Travel Tax

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he proposes to collect the new travel tax.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 15 December 1993]: Air passenger duty will be collected from airlines on the basis of the number of passengers carried. It is expected that airlines will add the duty to the ticket price paid by passengers when tickets are issued. Airlines will be required to register with Customs and Excise and make returns to account for the duty due. Copies of the document outlining the duty, issued by Customs and Excise at my request on Budget day, have been placed in the Library of the House.

ECOFIN

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the ECOFIN meeting on 14 December; and what arrangements have been made to deal with the need for borrowing by the European investment bank.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC ECOFIN Council of 13 and 14 December indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The last ECOFIN under the Belgian presidency was held on 13 December. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council adopted a recommendation for broad economic policy guidelines under article 103 of the treaty. The final text was closely modelled on the report from ECOFIN to the European Council agreed on 5 December subject to certain changes to ensure consistency with the European Council conclusions on growth, competitiveness and employment. The text was fully acceptable to me and in line with the policy of the British Government.

ECOFIN also conducted the assessment of progress required under article 109e of the treaty with regard to economic and monetary convergence and the implementation of Community law concerning the internal market.

The directive on VAT on second hand goods was agreed. The United Kingdom secured a satisfactory compromise on the treatment of imported works of art. These will be taxed at the equivalent rate of 2·5 per cent. until 30 June 1999. The Council also adopted a number of derogations for member states under the mineral oils structures directive—92/81/EEC.

The Council discussed its remit from the European Council to consider further the financing of trans-European networks. Financing will be on the basis of private sector finance supplemented by funds from within the expenditure ceilings agreed at Edinburgh and loans and guarantees from the European investment bank—EIB—and the European investment fund. It was agreed that there would be further discussions between the presidency, EIB and the Commission in advance of discussion in the Council during the Greek presidency on whether there was a need for any additional sources of finance.

There was some discussion of the Commission's proposal for interest rate subsidies on EIB lending to small and medium-sized enterprises under the Edinburgh lending facility. The presidency stressed the importance of reaching agreement on the text by the end of the year in line with the conclusions of the European Council.

There was also discussion of the Commission's proposals for the harmonised treatment of withholding tax on savings. I reiterated the United Kingdom's objections to the proposal but agreed that work should continue within the Commission and at official level.

The presidency heard a statement from the Commission on its proposal for a directive on the taxation of interest and royalties which, in broad terms, would remove source country taxation of cross-border interest and royalty payments between companies. The Commission hopes that work will continue at official level with a view to a further discussion in the Council in the new year.

The Council agreed in principle a Commission proposal for balance of payments support for Moldova. The Council emphasised that its actions did not constitute a precedent and would be funded within the existing budgetary ceilings for assistance.

There was little substantive discussion on the Commission's proposal for a carbon/energy tax and the matter was referred back for further consideration at official level. I made it clear that there is no need for further environmental taxes in the United Kingdom to meet our commitments under the Rio convention, and that we were opposed to an EC-wide carbon/energy tax.

ECOFIN Ministers and their EFTA counterparts met to discuss the economic situation against the background of the broad economic policy guidelines and the European Council discussion on growth, competitiveness and employment. There was general agreement on the importance of economic co-operation in Europe.

The Council took no formal votes.

WALES

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. Redwood: The cost of providing a car service for Ministers in the 1990-91 financial year was £143,000; four official vehicles were involved, including two based in Cardiff. The Welsh Office has no armoured Daimlers, and no car with a cost price of more than £25,000 contrary to some recent press comment.

Lamb Exports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the value of Welsh lamb exports in each of the past five years; and what plans he has for initiatives to improve export levels in coming years.

Mr. Redwood: Exports of Welsh lamb to Europe in recent years have been as follows:

	£ million
1989	33
1990	35
1991	45
1992	75
1993	95

The 1989 and 1990 figures are estimated; that for 1993 is a forecast.

Welsh Food Promotions Ltd. and its associated body, Welsh Lamb Enterprise, are working closely and successfully with Food From Britain in promoting exports of lamb. New market opportunities are being identified and exploited vigorously. I myself help promote Welsh lamb and other Welsh foods whenever opportunity presents itself.

Severn Bridge (Charges)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the effect of current Severn bridge toll charges and practices on tourism in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Six representations have been received regarding the effect of current Severn bridge toll charges and practices on tourism in Wales.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up a unit within the Welsh Office to advise local authority joint committees on grant application for grants during the period of transition to the new unitary structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. Advice will be issued to transition committees at the appropriate time where necessary.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he will make to encourage efficient adoption of information technology by the new unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I shall be urging the new authorities to make the fullest possible use of existing IT facilities.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he will issue guidelines for the listing of assets of local authorities prior to their merger to the unitary councils and the residual authority;

(2) what representations he has received on the timing of the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering for unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave him on 14 December.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Redwood: Executive search consultants are considered only in cases where candidates for a public appointment are unlikely to be found from the Department's register of candidates or recommendations from other sources.

Since April 1992, consultants have not been used in making public appointments. Some of the bodies themselves do use search consultants for appointments within their powers.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1992, I have advertised the chairmanship of the Welsh Development Agency and the Cardiff bay barrage independent groundwater complaints administrator. It is my policy to advertise by press release and/or paid advertisement the important posts available.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of (a) the further education funding council and (b) the higher education funding council; what guidelines he has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many board members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions;

(2) what criteria are used in the selection of the chair and the executive members of (a) the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales; (b) the Further Education Funding Council for Wales and (c) Housing for Wales, in respect of relevant experience and qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the Further and Higher Education Funding Councils for Wales are required to have a minimum of eight and a maximum of 12 members. The Chairmen and members were appointed in accordance with the criteria set out in section 1 and section 62 respectively of the Act, which require members of the councils to have relevant experience in further and/or higher education or in the industrial, commercial and financial sectors or the professions.

In making the appointments to the board of Housing for Wales, I consider factors including the skills, experience and capabilities relevant to the successful conduct of this major public body.

Forestry Commission Woods

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all Forestry Commission woods in Montgomeryshire; what plans he has to sell off any of these woods under the current disposals programme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Forestry Commission is preparing such a list which will also show those woods which are currently on the market, and I shall send a copy to the hon. and learned Gentleman as soon as possible. I shall also arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the date of expiry of the initial five year experimental phase of the environmentally sensitive area scheme in Wales; when he expects the new environmentally sensitive area agreement to be made available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The first management agreement signed under the Environmentally Sensitive areas (Cambrian Mountains) Designation Order 1986 expired on 18 June 1992. A revised scheme, under the Environmentally Sensitive Areas (Cambrian Mountains) Designation (Amendment) Order 1992, came into force on 30 June 1992.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheep farmers in Wales have not yet received their sheep annual premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Around 4,000 of the 17,445 valid claims received remain to be paid; a further 1,000 will be paid out shortly. The remaining claims are being given priority.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: My Department issued press releases for the Welsh Office and on behalf of other Government Departments as follows:

Records have not been kept of the split between press releases issued for the Welsh Office and for other departments for the years 1979, 1980 and 1981.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Redwood: Welsh Office advertising expenditure for each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	£000
1979-80	61
1980-81	62
1981-82	100

The records which my Department keeps and those of the Central Office of Information, which buys Government advertising, shows payments for invoices received rather than the value of actual advertising for each month. Costs are also monitored on a campaign by campaign basis. Shown is a table of monthly payments on that basis:

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Redwood: The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running the Department in 1992-93 was £60·6 million. The estimated outturn for 1993-94 is £66·8 million in cash terms and £64·7 million in 1992-93 prices. The Department's planned running costs expenditure for 1994-95 will be published in the departmental report due for publication in February. The 1993-94 figures include superannuation, but those for 1992-93 do not; so they do not represent a true figure for the increase.

Health Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will accelerate the fusion of health authorities and family health service authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 21 October that enabling legislation would be introduced. Authorities are already working closely together and are establishing joint management structures.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the income generated by private medical practice within each of the area health authorities in the years 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The amount of income from private medical practice generated within the area of each health authority in Wales in the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 was as follows:

£ thousands

District	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Clwyd	528	593	639
East Dyfed	256	246	210

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Redwood: The numbers are as follows:

Year	Press officers
1983	8
1984	9
1985	9
1986	9
1987	9
1988	8
1989	8
1990	8
1991	8
1992	8
1993	8

Green Belts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his decision on green belts and green barriers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Assembly of Welsh Counties submitted its advice on strategic planning guidance in Wales, which includes its consideration of the green belt question in late July this year. My right hon. Friend is currently considering that advice.

Business Advice

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to establish business centres offering easy access to business advice and support.

Mr. Redwood: Yes. I intend early next year to publish a prospectus inviting public and private sector organisations to make proposals for the formation of business centres. These will provide single points of access to advice and guidance for businesses and will have strong business leadership. I will approve a centre only if it reduces the overlap which currently exists. I will expect high-quality standards. They will provide services themselves, but will also be required to recognise the very substantial contribution that accountants, solicitors and others in the private sector make to the growth of local firms. The prospectus will be a challenge. I want to see imaginative responses.

Publicity Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the out-turn figures for publicity expenditure for the year 1992-93, the estimated out-turn for publicity expenditure for 1993-94, sub-divided by television, press and other categories; and if he will make a statement concerning proposals for publicity expenditure in the next financial year.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Publicity expenditure in 1992-93 and for the first seven months of 1993-94 is as follows:

	Television £000	Press £000	Other £000
1992-93	77	350	1,547
1993-94	—	[1]206	[1]653

[1] Provisional out-turn.

A reliable estimate of expenditure for the remainder of 1993-94 is not available at present. My Department will shortly be carrying out an annual review of publicity expenditure plans for the remainder of 1993-94 and I will write to the hon. Member when the information is available in the new year.

I aim to keep TV advertising to a minimum and then only for public information on items such as road safety and health.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Employees (Quotas)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the Government Departments, (b) next steps agencies and (c) public bodies which have been issued with certificates exempting them from fulfilling quota obligations on the employment of disabled people in each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It has been the policy of successive Governments to treat as confidential information about the issue of permits under the quota scheme to individual employers and not to disclose it without their permission. Government Departments and agencies are not legally bound by quota legislation and do not have to apply for permits.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those employers currently utilising his Department's two-tick logo denoting good practice in the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 16 December 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question requesting a list of those employers currently utilising the disability symbol (the "two-ticks logo") denoting good practice in the employment of disabled people.

Unfortunately I am unable to enclose a full national list with this reply. As you may know, the disability symbol was first introduced in 1990. It was reviewed towards the end of 1992 and, in order to clarify its meaning and improve its impact, we have introduced changes to the initiative which came into effect on 1 June this year. We now require employers using the symbol to make five specific commitments to good practice in the areas of recruiting, consulting and retaining disabled people, developing disability awareness and reviewing the effectiveness of the commitments in the organisation.

These changes have meant that the earlier symbol users needed to re-examine their practices and, in some cases, to introduce changes before confirming whether or not they would continue to use the symbol. My field disability service has been working to contact all symbol users, discuss the new commitments and confirm which employers would continue under the new arrangements. Former symbol users not able to make the commitments have been asked to cease using the symbol.

Although we have recently compiled a draft list of symbol users throughout the country, we are not yet satisfied that old users of the symbol who are not continuing as symbol users have been fully weeded out. It is, of course, very important that we are able to provide a full and accurate list of organisations using the symbol and we are reluctant to publish it until we have had a further opportunity to check its accuracy.

The checking process is now in hand and I would hope to write to you again with a full national list as soon as it is practicable. In the meantime, I enclose for your information a checked list of large company symbol users with whom our Major Organisations Development Unit has been working closely.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total number of certificates issued to companies in each year since 1979 allowing exemptions from quota obligations for the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 16 December 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about how many certificates allowing exemptions from quota obligations for the employment of disabled people have been issued to companies in each year since 1979.

It may help if I briefly explain employers' duties and obligations under the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

The Act places a duty on employers who have twenty or more workers to employ a quota of registered disabled people. It is not an offence to be below Quota. However, when in this situation, an employer has a further duty under the Act to engage suitable registered disabled people if any are available when vacancies arise. An employer who is below Quota must not engage anyone other than registered disabled person without first obtaining a permit to do so, and must not discharge a registered disabled person without reasonable cause.

Permits may be issued to authorise the engagement of one or more people for specific vacancies. However the majority of employers who are granted permits receive bulk permits. These authorise the engagement of a specified number of people who are not registered as disabled, during a period of up to six months. Bulk permits do not grant exemption from employers' duties and obligations under the Act.

We do not collect figures centrally on the numbers of permits issued overall. I am, therefore, unable to provide the precise information you asked for. However, I am able to provide figures on the numbers of employers that were below Quota on 1 June each year from 1979 onwards, who had been issued with permits at some stage in the previous 12 months. This information is in the attached table.

I hope this is helpful.

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the result of research carried out by his Department on the attitude of disabled employees and prospective employees upon the introduction of employers' contributions under the access to work proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Disabled people's organisations have generally welcomed the new forms of help to overcome barriers to work which the employer contributions under access to work will make possible. We are taking account of the views expressed by their organisations about the employer contribution in making our final decisions about the scheme.

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of entrants to the business start-up scheme who were receiving income support immediately previous to entry remained in business for at least 18 months.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the number of business start-up scheme—BSUS—participants receiving income support prior to entry is not routinely collected; nor has information in this form been collected through recent surveys. A recent follow-up survey of BSUS participants identified those who were unemployed and claiming any State benefit prior to entry on BSUS. Sixty-nine per cent. of these survived in business for at least 18 months.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those taking up enterprise allowance in 1992-93 were immediately prior to their taking up this scheme in receipt of income support or unemployment benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The business start-up scheme replaced the enterprise allowance scheme in April 1991. Information about those who start on the scheme is collected from special surveys. The latest survey covers those who started in May 1991. From the survey, it is estimated that 66 per cent. of those who started in May 1991 were unemployed and claiming benefit prior to starting the scheme.

Workstart

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken up places on the workstart pilot schemes in (a) south London, (b) Tyneside and (c) east Kent since last March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon and learned Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 7 December 1993, Official Report, columns 210-11.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The use of executive search consultants is one of the options which the Employment Department considers in making appointments to public bodies.

Since April 1992, the following appointments made using consultants and the fees paid excluding VAT are as follows:

Chairman of the Health and Safety Commission, appointed from 1 October 1993. Fees—£25,000.

Chief Executive of Investors in People UK,
appointed from 1 December 1993. Fees—£15,000.

Finance Director of Remploy Ltd.,
appointed from 1 April 1992. Fees—£18,085.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following five appointments to public bodies sponsored by the Employment Department have been advertised since April 1992:

Chairman of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS);
Chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission;
Chairman of the Health and Safety Commission;
Chief Executive of Investors in People UK;
Finance Director of Remploy Ltd.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of training and enterprise councils; what guidelines he has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many board members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions.

Miss Widdecombe: A training and enterprise council board must have at least nine directors and not more than 15, excluding the chief executive. The TEC operating agreement sets out the broad framework for TEC boards and specifies that two thirds of the directors must come from the private sector. The remaining third may be drawn from education, economic development, trade unions, voluntary organisations and the public sector. More generally, the Department expects a TEC board to reflect the composition of the local area it serves.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of chairpersons and board members of training and enterprise councils in England and Wales.

Miss Widdecombe: The total number of board members for the 75 training and enterprise councils for England is 1,015—75 of whom are chairmen. Information for the TECs in Wales is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales to reply.

Joblink Enterprise Ltd.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the average cost to public funds of a Joblink Enterprise Ltd. job plan class; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the total amount of funding the Government have committed to Joblink Enterprise Ltd. since Joblink Enterprise's inception; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 16 December 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Questions about Joblink Enterprise Ltd and their involvement in the delivery of programmes for unemployed people and in particular Jobplan Workshops.

It may be helpful if I explain that the Employment Service (ES) contracts for a range of programmes to help unemployed people back to work. Contracts are normally awarded as a result of competitive tendering and successful organisations come from the public, private and voluntary sectors.

You ask for information about one provider, Joblink Enterprise Ltd who currently hold a number of contracts to deliver ES programmes including Jobplan workshops. Without the permission of the organisation in question, it would, I believe, be inappropriate to disclose information about the average cost of these contracts not least because as it may give other organisations an unfair advantage when future tenders are invited. I can tell you, however, that the average costs nationally of Jobplan workshops and Restart Courses are £1,067 and £708 per course excluding VAT, respectively.

You also ask what is the total value of contracts placed with Joblink Enterprise. Between 1 July 1992 and 14 December 1993 we have paid them a total of £2,501,706 for the delivery of our programmes.

Vocational training is delivered through the Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) in England and Wales and Local Enterprise Companies (LECs) in Scotland. Contracts for the delivery of training are awarded by the individual TECs and LECs.

I have been told by Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate (TEED) of the Employment Department that there is no record of any training contracts between any TEC/LEC and Joblink Enterprise Ltd.

I hope this is helpful.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following figures show the Employment Department's spend for 1992-93 and expenditure plans for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

(i) The final outturn for the recurrent costs of the Department for 1992-93 is £1·568 million.

(ii) The running costs limit for 1993-94 is £1·672 million. An estimated outturn will be published in the spring in the 1994 departmental report and the unified Budget supplement.

(iii) The Department's planned running costs expenditure for 1994-95 will be available in the unified Budget supplement and the departmental report to be published in the spring.

The gross domestic product deflators required to calculate real terms figures are shown on page 121 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", HC 31, copies of which are available in the Library.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the European Community directives which the Government are considering submitting for abolition, modification or replacement on grounds of subsidiarity.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what costs have so far been incurred by the Health and Safety Executive in the course of its pay and grading review, including both the costs of external consultants and in-house staff.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive will assume responsibility for delegated pay bargaining on 1 April 1994. The cost incurred so far is £4,000 for computer software. Similar expenditure is anticipated in 1994. There are no additional staff costs.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what areas the Health and Safety Executive is considering for the introduction of increased, or new, charges to industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission has under review the scope for introducing new charges for performance by the Health and Safety Executive—HSE—of statutory functions and the provision of facilities and services. Existing charges are reviewed annually to ensure HSE's costs in discharging the functions or providing the facilities or services are fully recovered.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the Health and Safety Executive's grant-in-aid was spent in 1992-93 on (a) salaries, (b) travel and subsistence, (c) accommodation, (d) extra-mural contracts and (e) training.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive's expenditure expressed as percentage of the grant-in-aid was:

	Per cent.
(a) Salaries	65·6
(b) Travel and Subsistence	5·7
(c) Accommodation	11·3
(d) Extra-Mural Research and Testing Contracts	16·6
(e) Training	2·6

The Health and Safety Commission/Executive's total expenditure in 1992-93 was £211·8 million of which £171·3 million was funded by grant-in-aid.

Construction Sites (Electricity)

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations the Health and Safety Executive has received from the European Commission in respect of the use of 110 volt equipment on construction sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Earlier this year, European Commission officials responsible for ensuring free trade in electrical equipment challenged the Health and Safety Executive—HSE—to justify its consistent encouragement of the use of 110 volt as opposed to 240 volt electrical equipment on construction sites and similar outdoor worksites.

The European Commission has not asked that 110 volt electrical equipment be banned from use on United Kingdom construction sites, only that HSE should cease to encourage the use of this equipment in preference to 240 volt.

Correspondence is continuing between the Commission and United Kingdom officials who are defending our position on electrical safety in high-risk sites of this type.

Bank Holidays

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the early May day bank holiday in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. David Hunt: On 1 December 1992, the Government issued a consultation document on the future of the early May bank holiday in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

It is clear from the representations received by my Department that there is no clear consensus in favour of a move. While some favour permanently moving the holiday, businesses anticipate difficulties with such a change.

In light of its goal of reducing burdens on business, the Government have decided not to move the early May bank holiday from the first Monday in May on a permanent basis. However, for 1995 only, the holiday will be held in England, Wales and Northern Ireland on the second Monday in May, to link with events on and near VE day commemorating the 50th anniversary of the ending of the second world war. In Scotland the anniversary will be marked by an additional day's bank holiday, also on the second Monday in May and for 1995 only. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence is making an announcement today on the commemorative arrangements for 1995.

International Labour Conference

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for publishing the White Paper on the instruments adopted at the 79th session of the International Labour Conference 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today published the White Paper entitled "International Labour Conference", Cm. 2433.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total budget for the non-departmental public bodies for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no overall budget for non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—but the Government continue to keep the numbers and cost effectiveness of NDPBs under scrutiny. The total expenditure for NDPBs in 1992-93 is shown in "Public Bodies 1993", published today.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities were included on both the public appointments unit central list and reserve list for each year since its formation.

Mr. David Davis: Information about the number of women on the public appointments unit's list is available only from 1988:

Public Appointments Unit's list as at 1 April

	Women	Per cent.	Total
1988	1,573	27·5	5,721
1989	1,769	30	5,873
1990	1,807	30·5	5,926
1991	1,823	32	5,699
1992	1,868	33	5,671
1993	1,712	36·3	4,713

Information about the number of members of the ethnic minorities on the public appointments unit's list is not available for each year since the unit's formation. Currently, 138 individuals on the list are known to be members of the ethnic minority communities. However, since the unit only began inviting candidates to state their ethnic origin in mid-1990 this is likely to be an incomplete assessment.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table showing the numbers of people from each region held on both the public appointments unit central and reserve lists.

Mr. David Davis: The information requested is as follows:

Number of people on the Public Appointments Unit list

Region	Number
East Anglia	653
East Midlands	233
West Midlands	290

Region	Number
South East	3,339
Northern	155
North West	307
South West	350
Yorkshire and Humberside	258
Northern Ireland[3]	11
Scotland[3]	157
Wales[3]	107
Elsewhere	[1]42
TOTAL	[2]5,902

[1] Individuals in this category ar those who are currently living or working overseas.

[2] This figure is higher than the total number of people currently on the Public Appointment Unit's list (4,982 at 1 December 1993) as individuals can be counted as being in more than one region if they live in one area and work in another, or if they have homes in different areas.

[3] Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland also maintain their own central lists.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table showing for both the public appointments unit central and reserve lists for each year since its formation, how many of the people on the lists were aged (a) under 30, (b) 30 to 44, (c) 45 to 54 and (d) over 55 years.

Mr. David Davis: The information cannot be given in the form requested. The number of people on the public appointments unit's list by age group is available only from 1988 onwards:

Breakdown of public appointments unit's list by age as at 1 April

Age	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many non-departmental public bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. David Davis: On 1 April 1993, there were 358 executive bodies, 11 fewer than in 1992; 829 advisory bodies, 17 less than in 1992; 68 tribunals, two more than in 1992; and 134 boards of visitors, three more than in 1992. In total there were 1,389 non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs)—a fall of 23 over 1992. Details can be found in "Public Bodies 1993" published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

The publication also includes details of the numbers of appointments to boards and tribunals which are held by women and by members of the ethnic minorities. The figures show that at 1 September 1993, 28 per cent. of such appointments were held by women, and that 2·3 per cent. of such appointments were held by members of the ethnic minorities. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave further details in his answers to two questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) on 10 December, at column 378.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Davis: My Department issued 190 press releases up to 13 December this year. In the 12 months to 31 December 1992, we issued 113 releases. The Department did not exist in a comparable form before 1992 and earlier figures are not therefore available.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. David Davis: Expenditure by the Office of Public Service and Science on advertising was £19,304 in 1991-92 and £608,957 in 1992-93. The figure for 1992-93 includes £589,838 in connection with the citizens charter. Figures for earlier years are not available in the form requested.

The costs of advertising by the OPSS, including the citizens charter, in each of the last 12 months was as follows:

	£
December 1992	70,048
January 1993	3,677
February 1993	47,509
March 1993	5,376
April 1993	4,089
May 1993	22,255
June 1993	94,920
July 1993	35,878
August 1993	11,772
September 1993	47,179
October 1993	231,589
November 1993	58,199

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress towards achieving equality of opportunity for women staff in the civil service.

Mr. David Davis: In the past year, steady progress has been made. Women now represent 51·2 per cent. of staff in the non-industrial home civil service. There are more women than ever before in the management grades, with improved representation in the senior grades. There is an increasing use of flexible working patterns by women and men in the civil service and further development of childcare facilities. A report on the progress made during 1992-93 towards achieving equality of opportunity for women in the civil service has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ancram: The total salary costs for each health and social services board are as follows:

Handicapped Children

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision currently exists in Northern Ireland for (a) children with learning difficulties and (b) children with cerebral palsy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: A wide range of services and facilities is available at special schools and special units throughout Northern Ireland for children with learning difficulties, including those with cerebral palsy and other motor disorders. Each child follows a learning programme which is individually tailored according to his or her needs (as specified in his or her statement of special educational needs), together with any necessary equipment and ancillary support.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Care is taken to ensure that my special adviser does not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. He is not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the name and job description of each special ministeral adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Mr. Jonathon Caine is my special adviser. His role is to provide political advice on a range of matters concerning Northern Ireland.

School Bus Service

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the capacity of the school bus provided by Ulsterbus for the morning journey from Castlereagh road to Newtownbreda high school; how many children travel each morning in this bus; whether the bus is insured for this level of service; and if he will make a statement about the safety of pupils on this bus.

Mr. Ancram: The maximum seating and standing capacity on buses is governed by the Public Services Vehicles Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1985.

There are two 53-seater buses and one 49-seater bus provided by Ulsterbus for the morning journey from Castlereagh to Newtonbreda high school and other schools and colleges in the area; each of these buses may also carry up to 22 standing passengers. A recent survey by Ulsterbus showed that the maximum number of passengers carried on each bus at any time on their journey averaged 62. Ulsterbus is insured for this level of service.

Prison Officers (Assaults)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many assaults have been made on prison officers in each Northern Ireland prison in each of the last 24 months; how many prison officers required hospital treatment in each month; and how many assaults in each month were made by (a) loyalist prisoners, (b) republican prisoners and (c) other prisoners.

Sir John Wheeler: The table shows the number of prison officers physically assaulted in Northern Ireland prisons in each of the last 24 months resulting in an absence from duty on medical grounds. Details of officers requiring hospital treatment, and of the affiliation of prisoners who carried out assaults, are not held centrally but will be made available by the end of January.

School Performance Data

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent on the collection and publication of school performance data; if he has any plans to extend the scope of any future data to include vocational qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Expenditure on the publication of information about school performance in the 1991-92 school year was in the region of £32,000. Information to be published about school performance in the 1992-93 school year and subsequent years will include data about performance in general national vocational qualifications at intermediate and advanced level and in a range of other vocational qualifications.

Housing Executive

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are used in the selection of the chair and the executive members of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, in respect of relevant experience and qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The board of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive consists of 10 members, including a chairman and vice-chairman. Of these, three must be members nominated by the Northern Ireland Housing Council (a statutory advisory body made up of one representative from each of the 26 local councils). In considering appointments to the board of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive I have a responsibility to ensure that, taken as a whole, the board is balanced and reflects a mix of experience, business background and expertise to enable it to achieve the objectives for which it has been established. The work of the board, including the development of a more customer-orientated approach and appropriate business practices, means that board membership should include those with an interest in housing or related public sector policies and relevant professional, managerial and commercial experience.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments may, in accordance with paragraphs 5.20 to 5.25 of the guide on public appointments procedures, use executive search consultants when making appointments to public bodies. To date, however, search consultants have not been used.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Sir John Wheeler: The following appointments have been advertised:

Chief Commissioner of the Planning Appeals Commission.
Principal Professional Commissioner of the Planning Appeals Commission.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing, at 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 15 December 1993]: Gross public spending for each executive non-departmental public body from 1990-91 to 1992-93 and the estimated outturn for 1993-94 at 1992-93 prices is shown in the table.

My right hon. and learned Friend recently announced allocations to Northern Ireland programmes for the years 1994-95 to 1996-97. Allocations to individual public non-departmental bodies will be decided over the next few months.

Habitats and Species Directive

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will issue a consultation paper on the implementation of the EC habitats and species directive in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The consultation paper on the implementation of the EC habitats and species directive in Northern Ireland was issued on 7 December 1993 and was circulated widely to interested bodies.

The paper largely mirrors proposals put forward in the Great Britain consultation document which was issued on 4 October 1993, but takes account of Northern Ireland's distinct legislative framework.

The closing date for responses to the paper is 21 January 1994.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spends annually on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising and (c) press advertising; and what were the corresponding figures for 1985 and 1979.

Sir John Wheeler: The information could be obtained in the form requested only at disproportionate cost. The total figure for spending on all advertising, and other promotional material for 1992-93 is £7,356,526. Of this sum £509,000 was used for security advertising, a breakdown of which is provided in the table.

The available corresponding figures for 1985-86 and 1979-80 are £3,916,824 and £468,972 respectively.

SCOTLAND

Caledonian Pine

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to maintain and extend the area covered by native Caledonian pine in the next 20 years, in response to (a) the EC habitats and species directive and (b) the biodiversity convention signed at the United Nations conference on environment and development.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government recognise Caledonian pine forest as a priority habitat type of European importance, and as a significant component of United Kingdom biodiversity in respect of its genetic, species and habitat values. We are fully committed to supporting the international initiatives referred to by my hon. Friend and have already introduced measures for the management and extension of the area covered by Caledonian pine in Scotland.

Grants are available to private woodland owners for the regeneration and extension of native pinewoods, and since 1989, the Forestry Commission has grant-aided the planting and regeneration of over 6,000 hectares of native pines and associated broadleaves. This has increased the native pinewood area by one half. Owners of native pinewoods are also eligible for management grants in return for maintaining their woods in a way that conserves their environmental value.

The Forestry Commission itself has a programme of enhancing the biodiversity value of the 3,000 hectares of native pinewoods in its care, and of doubling the area by the year 2000.

Youth Training

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many YTS or youth training places there were in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is given in the table:

Estimated population aged 16 and 17

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1993, Official Report, column 639, how many letters, cards and other representations he has received from people resident in Musselburgh supporting the case for Musselburgh to remain in East Lothian; and what support he has had for his proposal to detach Musselburgh from the East Lothian local authority area.

Mr. Stewart: Since publication of the White Paper "Shaping the Future—The New Councils" a total of 35 letters, all of which have supported the retention of Musselburgh within East Lothian, have been received from Musselburgh residents, businesses and other organisations. In addition a number of the 14,000 postcards received as part of the East Lothian "Standing Firm" campaign have been sent from people resident in Musselburgh.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will carry out an investigation into the offering of tracts of Forestry Commission land to various conservation bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to my letter to him of 16 November, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to ensure that the freedom to roam on any currently available Forestry Commission land will not be placed in jeopardy following the report of the forestry review group; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The remit of the forestry review group includes the request that it should make proposals for changes which would improve the effectiveness of the delivery of the Government's forestry policy objectives, having regard to the Government's other economic and environmental policies.

Such objectives and policies include the practice of the Forestry Commission in encouraging public access to woodlands as set out in "Forestry Policy for Great Britain", copies of which are in the library.

Ministers are well aware of the importance to many people of access and therefore, have asked the review group to take this into account when developing its advice.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy, following the report of the forestry review group, to maintain the freedom to roam on any Forestry Commission land currently available in (a) the Sheffield, Hillsborough constituency and (b) elsewhere in Britain.

Sir Hector Monro: Ministers are conscious of the importance to many people of access to Forestry Commission land including land in the hon. Member's constituency. They have therefore asked the review group to take the issue of public access fully into account when developing its advice.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all Forestry Commission woods in Scotland by region; and which woods are to be placed for sale under the current disposals programme.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The Forestry Commission manages the following areas of land in Scotland:

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 December 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) earlier today.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what publicly owned woodland in the Clydebank and Milngavie constituency has been put on sale in each of the past five years; and what areas are planned to be put on sale.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Lists giving details of the areas of forest land sold by the Forestry Commission in each region from the start of the disposals programme in July 1981 to December 1992 are held in the Library of the House. A list of the forest land sold by the Commission in 1993 will be drawn up and placed in the Library in the new year.

Aucheneden—538 hectares—is the only commission woodland currently on the market in the hon. Member's constituency.

Mr. Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in respect of which areas of Forestry Commission land assurances have been issued that they will not be privatised; and according to what criteria these decisions are made.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 25 November 1993]: Ministers will await the advice of the forestry review group before considering what action, if any, should be taken in respect of the ownership and management of Forestry Commission woodlands.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation there has been in relation to the national forest plan to be published shortly.

Sir Hector Monro: Since we did not wish the plan to pre-empt the findings of the forestry review group or to prejudice our decisions on the group's recommendations, we decided it would not be practical for the plan to go beyond drawing together the various strands of the Government's present forestry policy and programmes.

We concluded, therefore, that there would be little benefit in consulting publicly before publishing the plan. Instead, we will be inviting comments on the plan after it has been published.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total budget for local enterprise companies in Scotland for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; and what is the planned budget for 1994-95.

Mr. Stewart: The allocation of resources to the local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I understand that total budgets for the local enterprise companies for 1992-93 and 1993-94 amount to £382·1 million and £379·2 million respectively, but that budget allocations for 1994-95 have yet to be determined.

Winter Deaths

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of excess winter deaths in Scotland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Stewart: The information available is given in the table.

Number of deaths by quarter, Scotland, 1990-92

Year	(Quarter)	Number of deaths
1990	1	16,933
	2	15,105
	3	13,737
	4	15,752
1991	1	16,278
	2	14,891
	3	13,814

Year	(Quarter)	Number of deaths
	4	16,058
1992	1	16,511
	2	14,668
	3	14,024
	4	15,734

Seals

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his estimates for each of the last three available years of the number of each type of seal resident in Scottish waters and the varieties and value of fish taken by such seals in each of these years.

Sir Hector Monro: Both grey and common seals are resident in Scottish waters. Estimated grey seal numbers are as follows:

	Number
1990	79,000
1991	86,900
1992	92,800

Comparable figures are not available for common seals which are presently estimated at 24,100.

Research has shown that seals are opportunistic feeders which consume a wide variety of species including those of commercial importance such as cod, whiting, various flat fishes, herring, sprat and sandeels as well as salmon. No recent estimate is available of the value of the commercial fish consumed by seals in Scottish waters.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest estimates by the sea mammals research unit of the numbers of grey and common seals in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: The latest grey and common seal populations in Scotland as estimated by the sea mammal research unit are 92,800 and 24,100 respectively.

Sheriff Court Fees

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider the proposed increases in sheriff court fees; and what representations he has received from the Law Society on this matter.

Mr. Lang: The changes to Sheriff Court fees, which are projected to lead to an overall 12 per cent. increase in income, are included in the Sheriff Court Fees Amendment (No. 2) Order 1983 which was laid before Parliament on 10 December.

My noble and learned Friend has received a number of representations from the Law Society of Scotland to which he has responded clarifying the basis of the changes.

Water Metering

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to local authorities, concerning features to be incorporated in provision of new domestic water supplies, with a view to future adaptation for metering.

Sir Hector Monro: No requirements have been placed on local authorities in Scotland concerning the future adaptation of new domestic water supplies for metering. Metering is a voluntary option we made available to householders from 1 April this year. The technical adaptations necessary are matters for discussion between regional or island councils as water authorities and the individual consumer.

In May my Department issued a circular to water authorities drawing their attention to the new optional provision (in the Local Government Finance Act 1992) and highlighting certain matters such as meter siting and payment terms that they might wish to take into account when meeting a consumer's request for a meter. I am arranging for a copy of the circular (SOEnD 10/93) to be placed in the Library.

Department of Education

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what public expenditure headings costs of public relations, publications, and circulars to schools, parents and local authorities, incurred by the Scottish Office Department of Education are shown; and how much has been expended under each heading since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1979, the Scottish Office Education Department (formerly the Scottish Education Department) has issued a wide range of materials to local authorities, schools and parents including consultation documents, circulars, regulations and publications.

The cost of these are included under a variety of public expenditure headings, either within Departmental running costs or within the votes appropriate to the subjects to which they relate. No single headings cover only costs related to these reports, circulars or publications. It is therefore not possible to identify such costs separately.

Kilgarth Tip, Coatbridge

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 411, if he will publish the correspondence relating to his decision about the application by City of Glasgow district council in respect of Kilgarth tip, Coatbridge.

Mr. Lang: I do not intend to publish the correspondence relating to my decision in the Kilgarth case. It is our normal practice to treat such papers as private matters involved only the parties directly concerned. After decision letters are issued it is for each party to decide whether, or to what extent, it wishes to disclose details of the case.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible. Copies of my reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria are used in the selection of the chair and the executive members of (a) Scottish Enterprise, (b) Highlands and Islands Enterprise, (c) the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council and (d) Scottish Homes, in respect of relevant experience and qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend is required by the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990 to appoint to Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise persons who appear to him to have knowledge or experience relevant to the discharge of the functions of those bodies (regard being had to the principle that equality of opportunity should be promoted as between men and women).

Criteria for the selection of the chairman and executive members of the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council are set out in the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 and are as follows:

(a) persons who appear to the Secretary of State for Scotland to have experience of, and to have shown capacity in, the provision of higher education or to have held, and to have shown capacity in, any position carrying responsibility for the provision of higher education and, in appointing such persons, he shall have regard to the desirability of their being currently engaged in the provision of higher education or in carrying responsibility for such provision; and

(b) persons who appear to the Secretary of State for Scotland to have experience of, and to have shown capacity in, industrial, commercial or financial matters or the practice of any profession.

The appointment of members of Scottish Homes is also made having regard to the relevant experience and qualities of potential candidates and according to the particular expertise required by Scottish Homes at the time.

Individuals are appointed by the Secretary of State in their own right and not as representatives of any organisation, or interest group.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Lang: No specific non-executive appointments to public bodies sponsored by my Department have been advertised since April 1992. However, there is a major publicity campaign, including press advertisement, each year seeking members for children's panels. In the summer of 1992 advertisements also sought applications from those interested in serving on health boards and NHS trusts.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of (a) Scottish Enterprise, (b) Highlands and Island Enterprise, (c) local enterprise companies and (d) Scottish Homes; what guidelines he has issued concerning the composition of these boards; and what specific guidance has been given on how many board members should be (i) from ethnic minorities, (ii) women, (iii) from the local business sector, (iv) from local authorities and (v) from trade unions.

Mr. Stewart: The minimum and maximum numbers of possible board members of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are laid down in the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990 while the maximum number of board members for Scottish Homes is laid down in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988, all as set out in the table. My right hon. Friend is responsible for making appointments to the boards of each of these bodies guided by the requirements of the relevant Act.

Guidelines published by the Scottish Office Industry Department before the initial award of operating contracts to local enterprise companies stipulated that at least two-thirds of their board members should be drawn from the local private sector, that boards should number a maximum of 12 and minimum of nine (for those contracting with Scottish Enterprise) or seven (for those contracting with Highlands and Islands Enterprise), and that each local enterprise company would have to demonstrate that it had obtained the commitment of a broad range of interested parties in the area it was to cover.

Possible numbers of board members

	Minimum	Maximum
Scottish Enterprise	9	12
Highlands and Islands Enterprise	7	12
Scottish Homes	[1]—	10

[1] No statutory minimum.

Note: Minimum and maximum numbers quoted are inclusive of the chief executive at each of the three bodies, who is an ex-officio board member in all cases.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of chairpersons and non-executive board members of local enterprise councils.

Mr. Stewart: There are 22 local enterprise companies (the Scottish equivalent of training and enterprise councils) each of which has a chairman. Arrangements governing the appointment of non-executive board members are operational matters for individual companies, within national guidelines which stipulate that boards should number a maximum of 12 and minimum of nine (for those contracting with Scottish Enterprise) or seven (for those contracting with Highlands and Islands Enterprise).

Inverclyde Enterprise Zone

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the proposed public local inquiry into the Parklea site in the Inverclyde enterprise zone will take place; and where it will be held.

Mr. Stewart: Once the relevant papers have been received from Inverclyde district council, it should be possible for a public local inquiry to be held into the Parklea proposal within six months or so. The inquiry will be held as near to the proposed development site as is practical.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure by my Department on advertising has been:

	£
1988-89	994,000
1989-90	2,081,000
1990-91	1,542,000

	£
1991-92	1,550,000
1992-93	1,366,000

Figures in the form requested are not available for 1979-80 to 1987-88. Total expenditure on information publicity for each year of that period was:

	£
1979-80	263,000
1980-81	362,000
1981-82	393,000
1982-83	386,000
1983-84	360,000
1984-85	704,000
1985-86	677,000
1986-87	857,000
1987-88	1,094,000

Details of advertising expenditure by my Department for each of the last 12 months is not immediately available and I shall reply further to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the date on which each advertising campaign initiated by his Department since 1987 was launched and its duration.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 December 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advertising campaigns have been undertaken by his Department each year since 1979; if he will list the cost of each campaign, the extent of each campaign, the advertising agency employed in each case, the subject matter and the office within his Department which sanctioned the spending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 December 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many press releases his Department has issued since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The following table shows the number of news releases issued by the Scottish Office information directorate in each year since 1985. The information for the years prior to that is not available.

	Total news releases issued
1985	1,660
1986	1,793
1987	2,070
1988	2,231
1989	2,089
1990	2,008
1991	2,028
1992	1,993
[1]1993	1,914

[1] As at 10 December 1993.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Lang: Information covering provision for running costs spending, including superannuation, in the Scottish Office and its agencies, is as follows:

£ million

	1992-93 Outturn	1993-94 Estimated Outturn
Actual	319	326
In 1992-93 terms	319	316

The GDP deflators required to calculate real terms figure are shown on page 121 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95" (HC 31).

Details of planned provision for 1994-95 and subsequent years will be published in my departmental report "Serving Scotland's Needs" in the new year.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by local authority area, at what age it is the practice to initiate a record of needs for children with learning difficulties; and if he will outline the statutory obligations in this respect.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Education authorities have a statutory duty, under the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 as amended, to establish which children aged two and over who have come to the authorities' attention as having special educational needs require the opening of a record of needs. Authorities must make provision for any special educational needs which are so recorded.

Wool Marketing Scheme

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the prescriptive resolution under the British wool marketing scheme, particularly relating to foreign merchants buying British wool; what measures his Department intends to implement to halt the alleged disadvantage that British merchants are suffering compared to their foreign counterparts; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has received representations from a number of hon. Members and from one company of wool merchants about the British Wool Marketing Board's prescriptive resolution of 1981 which exempts producers from the statutory monopoly if they are selling their wool direct for export to an overseas buyer. Although this means that an overseas buyer can, unlike a United Kingdom merchant, buy wool direct from a producer, I do not believe that in practice this damages the interests of United Kingdom merchants.

Retention of the board's statutory monopoly provides all producers with an outlet for their wool, including those in the more remote areas. It has the full support of the National Farmers Union of Scotland and the Confederation of British Wool Textiles.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of speech therapists employed in each health board area indicating, in each case, any shortfall which exists.

Mr. Stewart: The number, in whole-time equivalent terms, of qualified speech therapists employed in the national health service at 31 March 1993 in each health board area is given in the table. Details of the funded establishment for qualified speech therapists in each health board area are not held centrally.

Whole-time equivalent qualified speech therapists in the national health service in Scotland at 31 March 1993

Health board	Whole-time equivalents
Argyll and Clyde	38·0
Ayrshire and Arran	31·5
Borders	13·5
Dumfries and Galloway	19·1
Fife	40·3
Forth Valley	21·4
Grampian	52·4
Greater Glasgow	83·1
Highland	23·6
Lanarkshire	44·3
Lothian	69·3
Orkney	2·5
Shetland	2·0
Tayside	39·7
Western Isles	5·7

Distance Selling Directive

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the proposed EC directive on distance selling; if he intends to raise the matter with European partners; what evidence he has to suggest that the directive may cause problems for hoteliers and other businesses in Scotland; what action he intends to take to protect Scottish business; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have received no such representations. I am, however, fully aware of the problems which the provisions of this directive, if implemented, would pose to the tourist industry in Scotland. The Government are making appropriate representations.

Loch Lomond Report

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial resources he is providing to Scottish Enterprise for the implementation of the Loch Lomond working party report.

Mr. Stewart: The resources which my right hon. Friend makes available to Scottish Enterprise are not generally allocated for a particular activity or purpose; and it is for Scottish Enterprise and the relevant local enterprise companies to determine the level of resources to be devoted to implementation of the Loch Lomond working party report out of the budgets made available to them.

Nurses

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current target for the ratio of nursing teachers to students he considers appropriate; and what plans he has to review it.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 December 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 6 December 1993 at column 92.

Road Bridge, Queensferry

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to compensate contractors invited to bid to construct a new road bridge across the Firth of Forth at Queensferry; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 November 1993]: We have suggested that unsuccessful tenderers in any competition might have a proportion of their properly incurred bid costs up to £500,000 reimbursed by the successful tenderer. Tenderers might also be required to lodge a bond, for a similar amount, designed to secure conforming bids. These measures are consistent with practices elsewhere in the construction industry in relation to projects of such size and complexity where bid costs can be very large. They will stimulate competition to the ultimate benefit of users of the facilities.

No decision on whether or not to proceed to tender will be made until the results of feasibility studies now under way are available.

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department was consulted by the Greater Glasgow health board about the dismissal of Laurence Peterken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 December 1993]: Officials of the Scottish Office were not consulted by Greater Glasgow health board in relation to the proposed dismissal on 2 November of Mr. Peterken.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the report to be published of the investigation into the dismissal of Mr. Laurence Peterken as general manager of Greater Glasgow health board; and if he will list those consulted in the course of the investigation.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 December 1993]: The investigation by the chief executive, NHS in Scotland, is not yet completed.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland further to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 179, about the appointment of Mr. Peterken to the NHS Management Executive, if he will give details of the issues which Mr. Peterken is to examine.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 December 1993]: Mr. Peterken will review the future organisation of the Common Services Agency.

Departmental Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many files marked "not for National Audit Office eyes" are held by his Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 December 1993]: There is a total of 263 subject files in my Department which carry the marking "Not for NAO Eyes".

The marking "Not for NAO Eyes" is used in accordance with guidance from the Treasury and agreed by the National Audit Office under which documents relating to the handling of relations between Departments and the NAO are not automatically available to NAO while they are current.

The marking is removed once the subject matter is no longer current. The Scottish Office audit unit check from time to time to ensure that the marking is being used and removed correctly.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information available to him about the prevalence of the illegal taking of drugs by injection in prisons in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Independent research undertaken by Power et al over a period of 18 months during 1990 and 1991, when the prison population was some 4,800, found that 28 per cent. (154 prisoners) of a representative sample of 559 prisoners admitted to injecting drugs at some stage prior to imprisonment. A number 15 per cent. (85 prisoners) had stopped injecting prior to imprisonment, principally to reduce the risk of HIV infection. That left 12 per cent. (69 prisoners) still injecting following imprisonment, although most of this group were also attempting various forms of risk reduction such as stopping sharing, sharing less or sterilising before sharing.

The proportion of the total sample who admitted to injecting drugs at some stage during a prison sentence was 8 per cent. (43 prisoners), but 4 per cent. (23 prisoners) had subsequently stopped injecting, again principally as a means of reducing risk of HIV infection. That left 4 per cent. (20 prisoners) continuing to inject at the time of the research of whom 3 per cent. (17 prisoners) had shared needles in prison. The full sample of prisoners was also asked how many prisoners they personally "knew" (ie had seen or firmly believed) to be involved in intravenous drug misuse in prison. The answer averaged out at 2·7 per cent. of prisoners.

Following the outbreak of HIV infection at HMP Glenochil, 227 out of the 378 adult prisoners there took up the offer in June of independent counselling. Of these 76 (33 per cent.) said that they had injected drugs at some time in their lives and 33 of that group (15 per cent. of the total) admitted injecting at some point while in Glenochil.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been charged with attempting to smuggle drugs into prisons while visiting inmates this year in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners were put on report for being in possession of drugs this year in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 December 1993]: In 1992-93, 838 prisoners were put on report for being in possession of illicit drugs or injecting equipment.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made as to the extent of the availability of illegal drugs in Scottish prisons; and what action is being taken to prevent importation and use.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 December 1993]: It is difficult to make an accurate assessment of the true level of the availability of illegal drugs in prisons, but there are some indicators which help to measure trends. Any prisoners found in possession of illicit drugs or injecting equipment is guilty of a disciplinary offence under the prison rules. The number of recorded offences for the last three years were 1990-91—749, 1991-92—845 and 1992-93—838. Taking account of the prisoner population increase from an average of 4,738 in 1990-91 to 5,395 in 1991-93, the number of recorded offences suggests a slight decrease in the level of drug taking in prisons. Although detailed figures are not kept, most of these offences involve cannabis. A further indictor of drug activity is the number of finds of injecting equipment uncovered through security checks: 1990-91—72, 1991-92—96, and 1992-93—66.

The Scottish Prison Service makes strenuous attempts to minimise the amount of drugs entering prisons. These include the use of closed circuit television at visits, sniffer dogs, lockers for visitors' hand luggage, staff surveillance at visits, strip searching of prisoners suspected of receiving drugs following visits, use of "closed" visits for those prisoners who abuse the visits facility and regular close liaison with the police and other agencies.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what quantity of drugs and implements for drug use have been found in Scottish prisons in the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Any prisoner found in possession of illicit drugs or equipment is guilty of a disciplinary offence under the prison rules. Information on the quantity of drugs and implements is not collected centrally, but most drug finds in prison are extremely small and comprise of a few tablets or a small amount of cannabis. The number of recorded offences for the last three years were: 1990-91—749, 1991-92—845 and 1992-93—838. The number of finds of injecting equipment uncovered through security checks were: 1990-91—72, 1991-92—96 and 1992-93—66.

Caledonian Paper Mill

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about prospects for inward investment in the second Caledonian paper mill.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 December 1993]: All discussions between my Department and companies concerning future investment decisions are held on a strict commercially confidential basis.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his Department's policy on the provision of speech therapy for children with special educational needs; and if he is satisfied that this policy is being implemented throughout Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Education authorities have a statutory duty to ensure appropriate provision of speech therapy where this has been identified as a special educational need in a child's record of needs. Under new arrangements which came into force in 1992, all education authorities now contract with health boards for the provision of speech therapy services to meet the needs of recorded children and an additional £2 million was included in the local government financial settlement for 1992-93 for this purpose.

These new arrangements have been very effective. However, when we implemented them we did not know whether the amount of money set aside would be sufficient. We therefore undertook a joint review of costs with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and, following that review, we have concluded that an annual amount of £3 million is needed to provide fully for speech therapy for children with records of needs. As a result, I am announcing today that an additional £1 million is being included in the local government settlement for 1994-95 for this purpose.

I am confident that these extra resources will ensure that some of our less fortunate children receive the assistance we are all so concerned they should have.

Patients' Travel

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board the budget for patient travel.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1993]: The information is as follows:

Health Board	1993-94 £
Argyll and Clyde	224,000
Ayrshire and Arran	75,500
Borders	15,600
Dumfries and Galloway	44,300
Fife	41,700
Forth Valley	31,300
Grampian	156,300
Greater Glasgow	200,600
Highland	352,200
Lanarkshire	65,100
Lothian	83,400
Tayside	49,500
Orkney	380,200
Shetland	481,200
Western Isles	654,100

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by health board, for each year since 1990 (a) the number of patients flown to the mainland, (b) the number of medical staff flown to the mainland, (c) the number of visiting medical staff flying from the mainland and (d) the number of flights which will be affected by the imposition of air passenger duty.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1993]: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the additional cost to (a) Orkney health board and (b) Shetland health board in respect of sending patients to the United Kingdom mainland for treatment as a result of the proposed introduction of air passenger duty.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 December 1993]: Aircraft of under 10 tonnes maximum take-off weight, or seating under 20 passengers are to be exempted from the new excise duty. In practice this will exclude air ambulances operated by the Scottish ambulance service and there will be no additional cost to these health boards.

It is not expected that Orkney and Shetland health boards will require to purchase many tickets for non-emergency patients to be carried on fare paying scheduled flights to the mainland. Any additional costs would be more than offset by the 4·5 per cent. increase in funding for the NHS in Scotland which my right hon. Friend has announced for the next financial year.

Hospitals, Ayrshire

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what facilities in Ayrshire Central and Ravenspark hospitals have been closed by the Community Health Care NHS trust since its establishment;

(2) what facilities in Crosshouse hospital have been closed by the North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trust since its establishment;

(3) if he will make a statement about Ayrshire and Arran health board's plans for the future of Ravenspark hospital; and what steps the health board is taking to safeguard the interests of the hospital patients;

(4) if he will make a statement on the refurbishment of the reception area of Crosshouse hospital by the North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trust; if he will indicate what is the source of funding for this refurbishment; and what refurbishment work was carried out in the hospital before the North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trust being established.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to him on Thursday 9 December, at columns 350-51.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the implications for health boards of the imposition of air passenger duty.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1993]: There are exemptions to the new excise duty announced by the Chancellor in the Budget statement. The new excise duty applies only in respect of fare paying passengers and does not apply to air ambulances for emergency cases. Health boards do not make many arrangements for non-emergency patients to be carried on fare-paying scheduled flights. Most importantly for Scotland aircraft of under 10 tonnes take-off weight or seating under 20 passengers are exempt. In practice this will exclude many of the inter-island flights.

The implications for health boards would therefore be minimal and would be more than offset by the 4·5 per cent. increase in funding for the NHS in Scotland which my right hon. Friend has announced for the next financial year.

Clean Technology

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken by the Scottish Office to promote the use of clean technology by Scottish industry; what grants are available to assist industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The Scottish Office promotes the use of clean technology by raising awareness and by publicising and directing Scottish companies towards schemes of financial assistance which can assist such projects. Assistance may come from a variety of sources. For example, financial support is available under research and development promotion schemes, such as the small firms merit award for research and technology, support for products under research (SPUR) and the innovation element of the regional enterprise grants scheme, for companies planning to develop new products or processes—including those relating to clean technology.

Scottish companies will be eligible for funding under the new £16 million environmental technology best practice programme, which is to be operated jointly by the Department of Trade and Industry and Department of the Environment.

Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many commissioners have been appointed under section 33 of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993; when they were given their appointments; how many are women; what is the length of their term of office; what is their remuneration; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 December 1993]: Under the provisions of section 33 of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 which will come into effect on 1 January 1994, a commissioner to take a child's evidence will be appointed by a judge on application. The appointment will last for the duration of the commission.

Remuneration to the commissioner will depend on a number of factors including the commissioner's legal seniority, the duration of the commission and its location.

Highlands and Islands

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many copies of the booklet entitled "The Highlands and Islands Objective 1 Plan, 1994-99" have been published; by whom they were printed and published; what was the total cost of the printing, publication and distribution of the document; how many requests for copies have been received; and if he will list those individuals and organisations to whom copies have been sent.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The Highlands and Islands objective 1 plan 1994-1999 was published internally by the Scottish Office. One hundred and seventy copies were printed and distributed at an estimated cost of £2,700. These have been distributed primarily to the Highlands and Islands Partnership, to organisations responding to the consultation exercise on the objective 1 plan, and to other organisations, including Government Departments, with an interest in European structural funds in other areas of Scotland and the United Kingdom. These organisations are listed in the table. In addition, the Scottish Office has also sent copies of the objective 1 plan to a small number of other organisations and individuals, including the hon. Member, specifically requesting a copy:

Local Enterprise Companies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards of local enterprise companies.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The boards of local enterprise companies consist of directors who have formed companies under the Companies Act 1985, and have entered into contracts with Scottish Enterprise or Highlands and Islands Enterprise. The arrangements for appointing chairmen and directors are a matter for individual local enterprise companies, subject to the terms of their respective memoranda and articles of association, which must be approved by Scottish Enterprise or Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Harbours

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he has to aid improvements, improving safety, of islands and mainland harbours.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 December 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has power to provide financial assistance to harbour authorities, including Caledonian MacBrayne, for the improvement of transport piers and harbours in the highlands and islands. He also has power to assist fishery harbour works throughout Scotland. The relevant legislation is as follows. Harbour authorities are responsible for safety.

Congested Districts (Scotland) Act 1897.
Highlands and Islands Shipping Services Act 1960.
The Fisheries Act 1955.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is (a) the 1993-94 estimated outturn and (b) the 1994-95 planned provision of central government net capital expenditure in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The information is (a) £1,125 million and (b) £1,206 million respectively, resulting in an increase of over £80 million or 7·1 per cent.

The figures for both years exclude expenditure brought forward from previous years under the end-year flexibility arrangements. They also exclude capital expenditure funded from the European regional development fund.

The planned provision for 1994-95 is provisional since detailed expenditure allocations are subject to revision until final plans are published in the departmental report "Serving Scotland's Needs" and the supply estimates.

Youth Training

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many YTS or YT places there were in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available;

(2) what were the numbers of YTS or YT places contracted with managing agents in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested on YTS/YT places contracted with managing agents is available only in respect of Scotland as a whole. Numbers of places were as set out in the table.

YTS/YT places contracted with managing agents

	Number of places
At 31 March 1987	55,384
At 31 March 1988	63,285
At 31 March 1989	62,493
At 31 March 1990	60,985

Figures for the period before 1986-87 are not available. On 1 April 1991 Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and their networks of local enterprise companies took over responsibility for delivering youth training in Scotland. Local enterprise companies contract to provide numbers of training weeks, and numbers of places are not therefore available. Figures for 1990-91 are not available because of disruption to the management information gathering system during 1990-91.

DEFENCE

Ground Proximity Warning Systems

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current in-service date for the ground proximity warning system for the Jaguar aircraft;

(2) if he will list the dates of key project milestones for the development of ground proximity warning systems for (a) the Tornado GR, (b) the Tornado F3, (c) the Harrier GR5/7, (d) the Hawk, (e) The Tucano and (f) The Hercules; what plans he has to fit such a system to the Eurofighter in RAF service; and what other types in United Kingdom military service are under consideration for fitment of such a device.

Mr. Hanley: The only such project which currently has formal project milestones is the fitment of a ground proximity warning system to the Jaguar aircraft, the in-service date for which is 1997. We are also considering fitting such systems to the Tornado GR1/1A and F3, Harrier GR7 and T10, Hawk, Tucano and Eurofighter 2000 aircraft.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the titles, names of contractors and dates of all external research contracts on behalf of the National Air Traffic Services since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: My Department does not place contracts on behalf of NATS. This is done by the Civil Aviation Authority. Additionally, information relating to contracts placed before 1988 is not held centrally and could not be provided without disproportionate cost and effort. However, I am able to provide the following details.

Since 1 April 1988, some 378 contracts have been placed. These contracts cover a wide range of subjects including the development of improved air traffic control systems; airport and airspace capacity studies; safety studies; cost-benefit analyses; development/improvement of communication, navigation and surveillance systems.

Details of all companies to whom contracts have been awarded since 1985 again could not be provided without disproportionate cost. Companies awarded contracts since April 1991 are:

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to include accidents to Ministry of Defence (Procurement Executive) and Defence

Research Agency aircraft in the tables of military aircraft accidents published in "UK Defence Statistics"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We have no such plans.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Hanley: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. They are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend's special adviser is Crispin Blunt. His duties vary.

Foreign Military Personnel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what foreign military personnel are at present on training programmes with British military forces in the United Kingdom; and if he will list each country, the numbers of personnel involved and the courses they are taking.

Mr. Hanley: At the end of the week 5 to 11 December 1993, there were 592 foreign students, attending 102 different developmental and technical training courses at British military establishments, from the following countries:

Abu Dhabi
Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh

FH70 (Ammunition)

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 606, what were the outline terms of the trinational memorandum of understanding with Germany and Italy governing the procurement of 155 mm ammunition for the FH70 gun; why primers manufactured in Germany were procured; what proportion of the ammunition originally procured under the terms of this MOU remains in service; whether ammunition for the AS90 is to be procured under the terms of the MOU; and when he now expects to place orders in the United Kingdom for further 155 mm ammunition.

Mr. Aitken: The trinational MOU with Germany and Italy for FH70, which was signed in 1970, covers the development, evaluation and production of a towed 155 mm howitzer and its ammunition—comprising the L15 HE shell, charges and primers. The MOU allocates work between the three Governments, giving responsibility for production of primers to Germany. In fact, there is no alternative source of supply for these primers. Stocks of the same 155 mm ammunition were also purchased for use with the M109 gun and there is no differentiation in the current holdings of 155 mm ammunition between that originally procured for the FH70 and M109 guns. Therefore, it is not possible to state how much of the ammunition purchased for FH70 under the terms of the MOU remains in service. There have been no purchases of this 155 mm ammunition for several years. Ammunition for the AS90 howitzer will not be procured under the terms of this MOU, but under our normal procedures by competitive tender. Current purchases of 155 mm ammunition are limited to relatively small amounts for training; no major order for 155 mm ammunition is imminent. The country of manufacture of this ammunition will be determined by whichever company wins the contract to provide it.

Combat-ready Aircrew

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the requirement for all combat-ready RAF strike/attack/reconnaissance fast jet aircrew to be current in operational low flying down to 100 ft was introduced; and if this requirement applies to (a) Buccaneer crews, (b) Canberra reconnaissance crews, (c) instructors on the Haw aircraft and (d) instructors in the Tornado, Harrier and Jaguar reserve squadrons.

Mr. Hanley: The requirement for all combat-ready RAF strike/attack/reconnaissance fast jet aircrew to be current in operational low flying came into effect on 1 May 1993 for aircrew of No. 1 Group RAF Strike Command and on 1 November 1993 for aircrew of No. 2 Group. Canberra reconnaissance crews, instructors on Hawk aircraft and instructors on Tornado, Harrier and Jaguar reserve squadrons are not required to be current in operational low flying. In keeping with their maritime role, however, Buccaneer crews are required to be current in operational low flying over the sea.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of authorised operational low-flying movements, broken down by tactical training areas and by aircraft type, (a) in each year since 1979 and (b) in each month between January 1982 and June 1982.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Lance Corporal Gary Fryer

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now provide a copy of the police report and inquest reports on the death of Lance Corporal Gary Fryer No. 24792566 to his parents.

Mr. Hanley: I am not yet able to give the next of kin a summary of the report by the special investigation branch of the Royal Military Police. This is because the inquest cannot be held until an appeal by the driver responsible for the accident against the sentence on him from a German court has been completed. That appeal has yet to be heard. Once the inquest has been held, the next of kin of Lance Corporal Fryer will be sent a copy of the summary which would also cover the German police road traffic report.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much plutonium has been used in United Kingdom nuclear warhead production since 1953; and what is the current total inventory of weapons plutonium at nuclear sites in the United Kingdom and overseas territories.

Mr. Hanley: In the interests of national security, this information cannot be made public, the harm test, as set out in paragraph 3.7 of the White Paper on open government —Cm 2290—being applicable.

Hercules

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what stage the C130K Hercules fleet is at in its life cycle.

Mr. Hanley: The aircraft is now some 26-years-old, having entered service in 1967. At purchase, it was foreseen that the fleet would have a life of only 13 years. However, following major wing modifications in the 1970s, and ongoing fatigue monitoring, the majority of the fleet is expected to last until 2007.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what distinguishes the C130K Hercules, or similar military airlifter, from its civil counterparts in terms of operational capability and on-board equipment.

Mr. Hanley: The basic aircraft structure, systems and engines for both the civil and military variants of the Hercules transport aircraft are likely to be the same. Civil aircraft are not generally equipped for tactical tasks such as air dropping of troops, equipment or supplies, may not be capable of operating onto unprepared strips and are not equipped with the defensive aids necessary for operating in hostile airspace.

Aircraft (Hazardous Loads)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions apply to the carriage of live ordnance and other hazardous payloads on aircraft leased by the Ministry of Defence from civil contractors.

Mr. Hanley: The carriage of dangerous air cargo—DAC—by air is governed by the United Nations through the International Civil Aviation Organisation—ICAO—which issues technical instructions which regulate how cargoes should be packed and the restrictions to be applied with regard to their safe transport. With regard to the live ordnance and hazardous items of a similar nature, the ICAO regulations preclude their carriage on civil aircraft and these restrictions would be applied to any civil aircraft leased by the MOD.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have purchased any Trident missiles to replace those used by the United States for testing.

Mr. Hanley: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Polaris and (b) Trident submarines are assumed to be operational at any one time in calculating the level of operational explosive firepower of Britain's nuclear forces and their subsequent reduction.

Mr. Hanley: The anticipated reduction of more than 25 per cent. in the explosive power of the United Kingdom's operational nuclear inventory when Trident is fully in service compared with 1990 is based on the overall number of United Kingdom nuclear weapons—excluding any awaiting final breakdown—irrespective of how many may be deployed at any one time on submarines.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the transfer of Britain's sub-strategic nuclear capability to the Trident fleet requires any modification to the Trident missile purchase arrangements.

Mr. Hanley: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the funds allocated for the purchase of Trident missiles is spent on administration surcharges.

Mr. Hanley: Three per cent.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total number of Trident missiles being purchased by the United Kingdom are to be used in test firing.

Mr. Hanley: On current plans, about 20 per cent. of the total number of United Kingdom's Trident missiles will be test fired.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the 204 nuclear tests, the existence of which was made public by the United States Energy Secretary on 7 December, were jointly conducted with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: One. I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford) on 8 December, Official Report, column 298.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford) of 8 December, Official Report, column 298, what was the code name of the nuclear test carried out at the Nevada test site on 25 September 1964; and with which United States laboratory this test was carried out.

Mr. Hanley: The test, codenamed Courser, was carried out in conjunction with the Los Alamos national laboratory.

WE177 Bombs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the reduction in nuclear explosive firepower calculated by his Department assumes the stockpile of WE177 bombs to be deployed at (a) their highest yield, (b) their lowest yield or (c) a mixture of yields.

Mr. Hanley: It is not our practice to discuss details of nuclear weapon design, but the anticipated reduction of more than 25 per cent. in the explosive power of the United Kingdom's operational nuclear inventory when Trident is fully in service compared with 1990 is based on the full yield of all the weapons in the United Kingdom's stockpile.

MOD Dwellings

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings are currently owned by the MOD; how many have been sold since 1979; and what plans he has for further disposals.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings owned by his Ministry in Plymouth are currently unoccupied.

Mr. Hanley: As at 30 September 1993 the MOD owned 252 vacant dwellings in Plymouth, of which 245 were service married quarters and seven were MOD civilian houses. Of these properties, 107 were undergoing major maintenance work or modernisation and 63 were already allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly. In addition, some 47 vacant service married quarters were in the process of being sold.

Rapid Deployment Force

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the size and cost of the United Kingdom contribution to the rapid deployment force.

Mr. Hanley: In addition to the headquarters framwork, the United Kingdom is assigning to the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps—ARRC—the 1st United Kingdom Armoured Division, 3rd (UK) Division, and combat service support for both these divisions. The United Kingdom is also assigning 24 Airmobile Brigade to the Multinational Division (Central)—MND(C)—together with a contribution to the divisional HQ and communications elements and corps troops.

I will write to the hon. Member about the costs of the United Kingdom contribution.

Press Releases

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press releases his Department has issued in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: Details of press releases issued by the Ministry of Defence before 1985 are not available. Since that year, the number of press releases issued centrally by the MOD have been as follows:

	Number
1985	207
1986	190
1987	119
1988	149
1989	165
1990	263
1991	259
1992	307
1993	[1]181

[1] to 14 December

Command and district offices and bases of the Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force are encouraged to issue press releases to their local media. Full records of these are not maintained.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Hanley: Reliable manning figures are not available for the period prior to 1987 and estimates based on complements are provided for these earlier years. On this basis, the numbers employed in the Ministry of Defence Press Office have been:

	Number
1983-85	27
1985-87	23
1987-92	20
1992	13
1993	16

Military Airfields

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the military airfields in respect of which payments have been made by his Department equivalent to injurious affection compensation under the Land Compensation Acts.

Mr. Hanley: Compensation has been paid at the following military airfields:

RAF Conningsby
RAF Cottesmore
RAF Honington
RAF Lakenheath
RAF Leeming
RAF Mildenhall
RAF Marham
RAF Upper Heyford
RAF Wattisham
RNAS Yeovilton

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Hanley: In respect of MOD non-departmental public bodies, executive search consultants will be used when appropriate. At present, there are no appointments that have been made where such consultants have been used.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Hanley: There have been four appointments made to MOD NDPBs since April 1992: two trustees to the RAF museum and a chairman and one member to the Review Board for Government Contracts.

None of the above posts was advertised.

Contract Specifications

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 424, how he distinguishes between reliability and maintainability requirements forming an essential and non-essential element of a contract specification.

Mr. Hanley: The word "essential" was used to indicate the tauter approach which is now used in contracting for reliability and maintainability. In the past, reliability and maintainability were often specified as targets. Today's contracts are not fulfilled until the specified levels of reliability and maintainability are achieved.

Defence Research Agency

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a de-classifiied copy of the management parameters in the customer satisfaction survey used by the Defence Research Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. Chisholm to Dr. David Clark, dated 16 December 1993:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question about the DRA's customer satisfaction survey.

In answer to the first part of your question the management parameters of the survey are not classified and are shown in the annex. The results of the survey are however commercially confidential.

You also asked for a statement about the survey. As part of the DRA's Framework Document we are required to agree annual performance targets with the Secretary of State and one of these concerns quality of service. One element of this is the customer satisfaction survey.

The survey has three related uses. Firstly is demonstrates to my Secretary of State that the DRA is offering a quality service and that this is improving. The target for this year is a 2 per cent. increase in overall satisfaction since the previous survey. Secondly, it helps to develop the strategic relationship we are trying to forge with industry where we are both a competitor and partner. Thirdly, and very importantly, it helps the DRA's business sectors to become more effective by knowing their customers' perception of their strengths and weaknesses.

The survey has been carried out for the last three years and last year was extended to 18 key industrial as well as about 50 MOD customers. This year's survey is now under way but the results will not be known until about the end of January when they will be incorporated into the DRA's Business Plan.

RAF Support Command

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are used by the RAF Support Command maintenance group to assess efficiency savings.

Mr. Hanley: The RAF Support Command maintenance group efficiency programme is based on the detailed reporting of efficiency performance against annual targets set by the Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief of RAF Support Command, the agency's owner. Efficiency savings from all the stations and units within the maintenance group are rigorously pursued, and reported upon at mid-year and end-of-year financial reporting points. In addition, the maintenance group financial staff have pursued the efficiency savings generated by the group on behalf of other areas within the Ministry of Defence. Significant efficiency savings have also been programmed into each of the annual costing exercises.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the prototype financial and management accounting systems installed by RAF Support command maintenance group at RAF St. Athan and at its headquarters.

Mr. Hanley: The financial and management accounting system installed by the maintenance group at RAF St. Athan and the headquarters to meet Her Majesty's Treasury's draft accounts direction is a commercial package known as FW-Agresso. It is marketed by Fraser-Williams (East Midlands) Ltd.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the pursuit of a total quality approach to management within RAF Support Command maintenance group.

Mr. Hanley: To date four stations have adopted the total quality approach within the RAF support maintenance group.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide detailed descriptions of all of the formal quality systems that have been installed by RAF Support Command maintenance group since its formation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The RAF Support Command maintenance group adopted assessment and certification against recognised quality systems nine years ago. A succession of standards have been used: defence standard 05-21; the NATO allied quality assurance publications; and in recent times the International Standards Organisation 9000 series.

Royal Army Engineer Regiment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the length and number of emergency tours completed by each Royal Army Engineer regiment in each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Royal Engineers have deployed in regimental strength on four occasions since 1988:

To the Gulf (approximately August 1990-March 1991)
  (1) 21 Engineer Regiment with 7 Armoured Brigade
  (2) 23 Engineer Regiment with 4 Armoured Brigade
  (3) 32 Armoured Engineer Regiment with 1 Armoured Division
To former Republic of Yugoslavia (November 1992-May 1993)
  (1) 35 Engineer Regiment with 1 Cheshire.

Services (Christmas Celebrations)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he intends to take to ensure that service personnel deployed in (a) Bosnia and (b) Northern Ireland can properly celebrate Christmas and communicate with their families over the Christmas period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: An important part of the welfare support for service personnel on unaccompanied tours has always been the provision of facilities to allow them to communicate with their families and friends. This is particularly important at Christmas. For troops in Bosnia, free aerogrammes are already available and the arrangements for subsidised telephone calls will be enhanced over the Christmas period. In Northern Ireland, official welfare telephones are provided and personnel receive reimbursement towards the cost of telephone calls to families. In addition, concessionary telephone cards are available for purchase to allow more frequent contact. British forces deployed in Bosnia and in Northern Ireland will continue their operational duties over the Christmas period. Arrangements are nevertheless in hand for traditional regimental Christmas celebrations.. Church services will be held in both Bosnia and Northern Ireland.

Helicopters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which RAF units are currently equipped with helicopters capable of operating in all-weather conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: All helicopters are limited in some respects by weather conditions. RAF Chinook and Sea King helicopters have a full capability to operate under instrument flight rules. Furthermore, RAF search and rescue Sea Kings have a capability to operate in reduced visibility.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to replace the helicopters used by the Royal Marines Brigade air squadron; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Lynx helicopter armed with TOW missiles will provide both the Army and the Royal Marines with effective anti-armour capability for some time to come. We plan to replace Lynx/TOW with a modern attack helicopter system by the end of the decade, and this will offer a substantial increase in capability. We have yet to decide on total numbers and deployment. The Royal Marines also currently operate Gazelle helicopters in the communications and battlefield support role. Options for the replacement of these latter aircraft are under consideration.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of his plans to introduce the Merlin helicopter into service, including a timetable setting out the numbers to be introduced in each year for the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We currently have 44 EH101 Merlin ASW helicopters on order. The first of these is expected to be delivered to the Royal Navy in 1996. Initial aircraft will be allocated to operational proving trials. It is planned that the first operational aircraft will be deployed around the turn of the century.

All-weather Helicopters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Army units are currently equipped with helicopters capable of operating in all-weather conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: All helicopters are limited in some respects by weather conditions. All Army air corps helicopters can operate in the majority of conditions likely to be encountered in their primary deployment areas. There are, however, limitations in their capability in cold weather and in poor visibility.

10 Squadron

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual running cost of 10 Squadron.

Mr. Hanley: The average annual operating cost—at 1993-94 outturn prices—of 10 Squadron is approximately £43 million. This includes personnel, fuel, maintenance and equipment support costs but excludes depreciation, interest on capital, station and administration costs.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional revenue has been generated by the activities of 10 Squadron; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: 10 Squadron was established to provide strategic airlift in support of British defence and foreign policy objectives. It retains an immediate capacity to respond instantly to crises and war situations. In peacetime, it is used to support defence activities across a wide spectrum by providing air transport for operational, administrative and exercise purposes.

It does not generate revenue per se, but when non-defence specific tasks are undertaken on behalf of other Government Departments, the United Nations, or NATO, these are carried out on a repayment basis. The total value of the repayment tasks undertaken on behalf of the Prime Minister, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and in supporting United Nations operations during the 12 months to October 1993, was in the order of £2 million.

Departmental Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give the size, name and location by county, in Wales of land, (a) owned and (b) leased by his Department which he intends to dispose of;

(2) if he will list by region in Scotland the size, location and name of all land (a) owned and (b) leased by his Department which he intends to dispose of;

(3) if he will give the size, location and name by county, in England of land (a) owned or (b) leased by his Department which he intends to dispose of.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the area, in hectares, in each county of England of land (a) owned or (b) leased by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: Land owned—freehold—and leased—leasehold—including foreshore by the Ministry of Defence in each of the counties of England is set out in the tables:

Ferranti International

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 176, how many contracts he currently has with Ferranti International.

Mr. Hanley: Our records show about 500 current contracts with Ferranti International. On many of these, however, work is complete and they remain open only pending final settlement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 177, what assessment he has made of the impact of the immediate termination of all contracts with Ferranti International on the operational effectiveness of (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The receivers of Ferranti International are continuing to trade, and my Department is co-operating with them to minimise any disruption to MOD contracts. The question of the immediate termination of all contracts does not arise in the present circumstances.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 177, what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts relating to the future of Ferranti International.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of outstanding commitments to Ferranti.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has a large number of contracts with Ferranti International, and defence procurement officials have been discussing with the receivers how the outstanding business can be completed with the minimum of disruption.

Amphibious Operations (Support Vessels)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current vessels available for supporting amphibious operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Government are satisfied that the Royal Navy is fully capable of providing the support which amphibious operations currently require. In recognition of the importance of this area of operations in the current strategic environment however, the Government are currently making a sizeable investment in our capability in this field: the contract for the design and construction of a helicopter carrier was awarded on 11 May; project definition studies for the replacement of the assault ships HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid are now nearing completion; and the invitation to tender for the refurbishment of the landing ship logistic Sir Bedivere was issued on 26 November 1993.

Bosnia (Logistical Support)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what extra expenditure has been caused by the deployment of Warrior armoured vehicles in Bosnia on (a) spare parts and (b) other logistical support for these vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what extra expenditure has been caused by the deployment of armoured reconnaissance vehicles in Bosnia on (a) spare parts and (b) other logistical support for these vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Agencies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are used by (a) the Defence Analytical Services Agency, (b) the Defence Operational Analysis Centre and (c) the Directorate General of Defence Accounts to assess efficiency.

Mr. Hanley: I have asked each of the chief executives to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from P. Altobell to Dr. David Clark, dated 16 December 1993:

Minister of State (DP) has asked me to reply to your Question about the measures used to assess efficiency in my Agency.

In DASA we operate a task costing system, and as a result we are able to estimate the cost of producing each of our outputs. This information, together with the replies to our Customer Satisfaction Survey, and the monitoring of established Service Level Agreements, enables changes in efficiency to be assessed.

Letter from D. Leadbeater to Dr. David Clark, dated 16 December 1993:

The Minister of State for Defence Procurement has asked me to reply to your Question about the measures used to assess efficiency in my Agency.

The Secretary of State has set 7 key Performance Targets for my Agency in 1993-94; these have been published in Hansard. One of these targets specifically calls for an increase in efficiency by 2 per cent. of the cash budget.

The Agency maintains tight control of operating costs through a full cost accounting system, hence achieving full visibility of the cost of outputs covering studies, trials, advice and models.

In order to meet the 2 per cent. target, the Agency has a set of efficiency measures which are monitored by the Department and are subject to audit.

Letter from K. M. Miller to Dr. David Clark, dated 15 December 1993:

Minister of State (DP) has asked me to reply to your question about measuring efficiency in my Agency.

My key performance targets for 1993/94 are published in Hansard and include one specifically relating to efficiency. In order to assess whether this target has been met we identify individual measures which we have taken to improve efficiency and we place a value on them by comparing output achieved with the cost of resources utilised, before and after each measure is introduced.

Additionally, my Agency routinely maintains records showing the total outputs of the Agency, eg number of bills processed, number of pay accounts managed, etc, and again by relating these to the inpout of resources used in achieving these outputs, they reflect, over a period of time, our efficiency gains.

We also carry out surveys of our customers to monitor our performance in meeting their needs.

Finally, parts of my Agency are seeking BS5750 accreditation or have adopted Total Quality approaches to their work.

This reply has been discussed with, and agreed by, Mr. Mike Dymond, the Chief Executive. I am signing it on his behalf as he is out of the office today.

Army Costs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 358, if the figures for the annual running costs of Army units include the costs of replacing their equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: No.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 358, if he will give details of all the changes made to the basis used for costing Army units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The figures provided in my answer of 9 December 1993, Official Report, column 358, represent the best available estimate of the annual operating costs for the units in question. Until 1991, costs of units were derived from a defence-wide cost-attribution system. This system was largely reliant on judgments on the attributions of costs which were refined over time. It would not be possible to give a more detailed explanation of the differences between current cost estimates and those produced prior to 1991 without incurring disproportionate cost.

Submarines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the Royal Navy's conventional submarine fleet.

Mr. Hanley: The only remaining conventionally powered submarines in service with the Royal Navy are the four vessels of the Upholder class. This year's Statement on the Defence Estimates announced our decision to withdraw these submarines from service by 1995. We are currently examining options for their sale, lease or storage, bearing in mind the investment which they represent.

Otterburn Training Area

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the full terms of reference of the environmental impact assessment that is being prepared for the development plan for Otterburn training area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The study, the terms of which have been agreed with the Northumberland national park authority, is not a part of the formal planning process, but will provide a blueprint for future developments. Until firm proposals are available, both parties have agreed that public comment would be premature.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the name of the firm of independent planning and environmental consultants that is preparing the environmental impact assessment for Otterburn training area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The firm of independent planning and environmental consultants that is preparing the preliminary environmental impact assessment for Otterburn training area is RPS Clouston which is based at Steventon, Abingdon, near Oxford.

Army Requirements

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his German and Canadian counterparts relating to future training requirements for the British Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: British Army field training currently takes place at Canadian training areas at the British army training unit, Suffield—BATUS—and the British army support unit, Wainwright—BATUW. United Kingdom use of these training areas is covered by a memorandum of understanding with the Canadian MOD and is not due to expire until 2006.

Regular official contact with the Canadian defence authorities makes them well aware of our continuing commitment to training at Suffield and Wainwright and our commitment to ensure that all defence activity is undertaken in the most cost-effective manner.

In Germany, field training exercises are limited to battle group level and below. I understand that the Federal Republic of Germany is considering the establishment of a field training centre in one of the eastern Lander. There are no plans to involve the British Army in this training facility nor are there any plans to increase British training areas in Germany as a whole. German MOD officials are kept informed of our thinking in this area.

Mechanised Brigade

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a declassified statement of the future training requirements of 19 Mechanised Brigade.

Mr. Hanley: 19 Mechanised Brigade will conduct its future training in field training exercise—FTX—and command field exercise—CFX—modes on Salisbury plain training area—SPTA—with low-level individual and collective training carried out on local training areas.

FTX aims to practice all elements of a formation, unit and sub-unit under as realistic conditions as possible and CFX training is a mode of exercising whereby command, control and communication elements deploy, but only selected formations do so in full strength. It combines the aims of FTX with command post exercise—CPX—whereby enemy and/or friendly forces are generated, displayed and moved by electronic or other means on computers, simulators or other training devices. The purpose of the CPX is to practice headquarters staffs at all levels in a realistic way which does not involve manoeuvre elements.

In addition, 19 Mechanised Brigade will also conduct its armoured/mechanised battle group training at the British Army training unit, Suffield—Canada.

Training Equipment, Catterick

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the installation of new types of computerised training equipment at Catterick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The only training facilities that use computerised training equipment are the brigade and battle group trainer—north—located at HQ Catterick and the unit fire control trainer and small arms trainer which are used for in-barracks training at unit level. HQ 19 Mechanised Brigade, however, may be involved in computer assisted exercises where computers simulate the operational environment and provide event resolution, when the higher formation trainer—HFT—comes into service in 1994. HFT is a computer based trainer to be used for "wargaming" at up to corps level.

Royal Yacht

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of the royal yacht; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The royal yacht underwent a refit in Portsmouth in 1991 to enable her to remain safe, seaworthy and up-to-date for the next few years. Nevertheless, she is an old ship, commissioned in 1954, and in view of her age, her future is currently under review. A wide range of options are being considered.

Type 23 Frigate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the type 23 frigate procurement programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We currently plan to issue invitations to tender for a further batch of type 23 frigates during the course of next year and to place an order in 1995.

Departmental Objectives

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 424, if he will publish details of the quantitative data he uses in the assessment of the achievement of departmental standing objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Unclassified data related to the achievement of departmental standing objectives are published in the departmental report—Cm 2201. Other relevant material is published in the Statement on the Defence Estimates—Cm 2270. Copies of both are in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 424, if he will place in the Library declassified copies of all the reports of top and higher level budget holders which contain their judgments on the performance against departmental standing objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: No. Although reports by top and higher-level budget holders are sources for MOD headquarters analysis, they cannot give a full account of performance against departmental standing objectives. Piecemeal publication could give an unbalanced and misleading impression. Preparing declassified versions would also divert staff effort and add cost. An overview of performance against departmental standing objectives is published in the departmental report—Cm 2201.

Warrior Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what operational impact the deployment of Warrior armoured vehicles in Bosnia has had on those Warrior armoured vehicles still deployed in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The deployment of a Warrior armoured infantry battalion to the former Yugoslavia has had little operational impact on the rest of the Warrior fleet remaining in Germany. For a time there was a slight shortage of some items for which longer notice is needed. The procurement and repair strategy has been adjusted to ensure the Warrior fleet as a whole is fully supported.

Armoured Reconnaissance Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what operational impact the deployment of armoured reconnaissance vehicles in Bosnia has had on those armoured reconnaissance vehicles still deployed in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There has been no operational impact on those armoured reconnaissance vehicles still deployed in Germany as there was a surplus of this type of vehicle due to the drawdown.

HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current operational status of (a) HMS Fearless and (b) HMS Intrepid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: HMS Fearless is fully operational, having completed a period of programmed maintenance earlier this year. HMS Intrepid is currently held in a state of extended readiness at Portsmouth. As such she has a reduced ship's crew, and some systems have been placed in preservation. She remains in commission, however, and could be brought forward for operations if an emergency arose.

RAF Stations

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distance between (a) RAF Valley and RAF St. Athan, (b) RAF St. Athan and Pembrey range, (c) Pembrey range and RAF Valley, (d) RAF Chivenor and RAF St. Athan, (e) RAF Chivenor and Pembrey range, (f) RAF Brawdy and RAF St. Athan and (g) RAF Brawdy and Pembrey range.

Mr. Hanley: The distances are as follows:

a. RAF Valley and RAF St. Athan: 116 nautical miles
b. RAF St. Athan and Pembrey range: 38 nautical miles
c. Pembrey Range and RAF Valley: 91 nautical miles
d. RAF Chivenor and RAF St. Athan: 33 nautical miles
e. RAF Chivenor and Pembrey Range: 38 nautical miles
f. RAF Brawdy and RAF St. Athan: 68 nautical miles
g. RAF Brawdy and Pembrey Range: 30 nautical miles

Note: 1 nautical mile=1·15078 statute miles=1·8520 km.

RAF St. Mawgan

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which search and rescue base covers RAF St. Mawgan military operations.

Mr. Hanley: Search and Rescue—SAR—cover for military aircraft operation in the immediate vicinity of RAF St. Mawgan is provided by the SAR bases at RAF Chivenor and RNAS Culdrose. Aircraft conducting military operations out of RAF St. Mawgan in other areas of the United Kingdom, and requiring SAR support, would be allocated resources by the rescue and co-ordination centres, depending upon the position of the aircraft, whether conditions and SAR resources available.

RAF Chivenor

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his best estimate of the annual cost of support services, including security, catering, sewage disposal and emergency fire services at RAF Chivenor from 1 October 1994.

Mr. Hanley: Under the proposals that I announced in the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates) on 7 December, Official Report, column 177, flying training would cease at RAF Chivenor from 1 October 1994 and by 1995 Chivenor would operate on a care and maintenance basis. The annual cost of support services for 1 October 1994 would be some £937,000 per annum.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on new and existing buildings and infrastructure at (a) RAF Chivenor and (b) RAF Valley in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: Available historical records show that the amounts spent on new and and existing buildings and infrastructure are as follows:

	£
(a) RAF Chivenor (last two years only):
1992-93	5,972,000
1993-94 (to date)	3,038,000
(b) RAF Valley (last three years):
1991-92	4,197,000
1992-93	8,374,000
1993-94 (to date)	3,004,000

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in, 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Hanley: The final outturn for the running costs of the Ministry of Defence in 1992-93 was £6,251,000. The running cost limit for 1993-94 is £5,475,000. An estimated outturn will be published in spring 1994 in the departmental report and the unified budget supplement. The Department's planned running costs expenditure in 1994-95 is £5,410,000. In 1992-93 prices, the figures shown for 1993-94 and 1994-95 are £5,302,000 and £5,038,000 respectively.

World War II

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are being made to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II in 1995.

Mr. Rifkind: I am pleased to be able to announce that the Government intend to commemorate the events associated with the ending of the second world war; to recognise the sacrifices of so many who were involved; to give thanks for the beginning of peace; and to take forward the spirit of reconciliation. There will be two church services in London. One will be in St. Paul's cathedral; the venue for the other has yet to be decided. One will be on Sunday 7 May, the other in mid-August. Each will be followed by a parade. The Government also envisage that commemorations in London will be reflected in events around the nation and intend to consult widely, especially with veterans' associations and voluntary organisations, on the detailed planning.

In addition, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced today, for 1995 only and in association with these commemorative events, the early May bank holiday will be on Monday 8 May, which in Scotland will be an additional day's bank holiday.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the decision to extend ethnic monitoring to service personnel will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The implementation of in-service ethnic monitoring will begin this week with a survey of the ethnic origins of regular armed forces' personnel, excluding the brigade of Gurkhas. Ethnic origin questionnaires will be sent first to RAF personnel, and then to Navy and Army personnel in the new year. Information on the survey is currently being disseminated throughout the armed forces. To reinforce the services' policy of equal opportunities for personnel of all racial groups, a code of practice on race relations in the armed forces has been published and is also being disseminated throughout the services. A copy of the code of practice has been placed in the Library of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Northern Ireland Courts

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons have been appointed deputy county court judges in Northern Ireland in the current year; and for what periods such appointments have lasted.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Thirteen persons have been appointed deputy county court judges in Northern Ireland since 1 January 1993, each appointment being made for a period of three years.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the functions organised by the Northern Ireland court service to which officials of the Irish Republic were invited in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only function organised by the Northern Ireland court service to which officials of the Government of the Irish Republic were invited in 1992 and 1993 was the Christmas drinks party hosted by the directorate.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many county court vacancies exist in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: At present two county court vacancies exist in Northern Ireland.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Magistrates, Gwent

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the political balance of magistrates in Gwent.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political balance of magistrates for the Gwent commission area, based on their political affiliations on appointment, is as follows:

Political party
Conservative	115
Labour	97
Liberal Democrat	34
Plaid Cymru	2
Independent/Not known	56

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Chancellor's Department has employed the following press officers: in 1983—one; in 1984—one; in 1985—two; in 1986—two; in 1987—two; in 1988—two; in 1989—three; in 1990—four; in 1991—six; in 1992—six; in 1993—seven.

Legal Aid

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what reports he has received from the Legal Aid Board in respect of the average time taken to pay solicitors interest payments made on the payments and negotiations between solicitors and the board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board has extensive contact with the Law Society, including many meetings at which a wide range of matters are discussed. The board reports annually to the Lord Chancellor. Details about the time taken to pay lawyers' bills are included in the report. The board's targets and performance for the year to date are set out in the table. The board's payment targets are short and are generally met. It is therefore not appropriate to pay interest. On rare occasions it makes an ex-gratia compensation payment where there has been an error by the board which caused undue delay in payment.

Small Motor Accident Claims

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reason small motor accident claims are excluded from the small claims court procedure in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The scope of the small claims procedure in Northern Ireland is a matter for the Northern Ireland County Court Rules Committee. In line with the different historical development of the procedure in that jurisdiction, motor accident claims are currently excluded from the small claims court. In the light of a recent report by the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland, I understand that the Rules Committee will be invited to re-examine this issue early in the new year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Know-how Funds

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which companies benefited from the training for investment personnel scheme in each year since the scheme's inception.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A total of 102 businesses have taken up training for investment personnel scheme grant offers under the know-how fund since 1990. A list has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many pre-investment feasibility studies have been carried out in each year since the know-how funds' creation; and what was the total cost in each year of the Government contribution to the cost of those studies;

(2) how many pre-investment feasibility studies have resulted in projects or investments going ahead, by year, since the creation of the know-how funds.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is in the table.

Know-how fund: Pre-investment feasibility studies (PIFS) scheme

Year	Number of applications approved[1]	Total grant offered £	Number of reports on studies submitted to date	Number of investment operations: going ahead	not going ahead	not yet decided[2]	Number of reports awaited

Investment Personnel Scheme

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many training for investment personnel scheme places have been paid for by the Government; and what was the total cost per year since the creation of the scheme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows:

Know-How Fund: Training for investment personnel scheme (TIPS)

Year	Number of trainees	Total grant offered £
1990	35	80,147
1991	166	643,629
1992	491	1,029,808
[1]1993	460	843,594
Total	1,152	2,597,178

[1]to 14 December

Note:

The TIPS scheme finances the training of key indigenous personnel employed in British investment operations located in countries covered by the know-how fund. The training can take place either in the United Kingdom, or in-country, or—very often—both. Training in the United Kingdom is limited to small numbers of key personnel, whereas in-country training is usually spread more widely among operational staff. A priority in all cases is to identify and train indigenous trainers who can multiply and continue the training provided under the TIPS scheme. The rate and amount of grant offered varies in each case, up to a maximum of £50,000.

EDUCATION

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Robin Squire: Care is taken to ensure that the special adviser does not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. The special adviser is not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Stockport LEA

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has about the number of staff employed other than in schools by the Stockport local education authority; and what are the corresponding figures for earlier years.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the number of employees of each local education authority is compiled by the Local Government Management Board from data collected on behalf of the Joint Staffing Watch. The table shows the total numbers of teaching staff and other education staff employed by the Stockport local authority, both in schools and elsewhere. It is not possible to separate out those among them who were not employed in school.

	Teachers and Lecturers		Education—Other[2]
March	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time
1990	2,511	1,356	1,021	2,468
1991	2,381	1,492	1,058	2,510
1992	2,379	1,476	974	2,823

[1] The table covers all staff in the LEA maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools sector, special and further education—including colleges which have since transferred to the new FE sector—and central administration.

[2] "Other" includes educational support, clerical, school meals and premises-related staff employed in schools and colleges, together with central services and administration within the education service.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Boswell: Figures for the number of press officers are available only for the last four years. These are as follows:

Year	Press officers
1990	9
1991	8
1992	8
1993	11

National Union of Students

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many student unions are affiliated to the National Union of Students; and which student unions have opted out or have attempted to opt out of the National Union of Students in the past five years.

Mr. Boswell: Affiliation arrangements are a matter between the National Union of Students and the student unions at institutional level. Comprehensive information on student unions' affiliation decisions is not available centrally.

The NUS's annual report for 1991-92 indicates that some 800 student unions throughout the United Kingdom were affiliated. The information available to the Department is that the student unions at Edinburgh, Glasgow and St. Andrew's universities, and at King's and Imperial colleges, London, are not currently affiliated to the NUS.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the amount of money given to the National Union of Students (a) directly and (b) indirectly by the Government in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: The National Union of Students is not supported directly from central Government funds. It is a confederation of campus student unions and depends for its main income on affiliation fees from local unions. Student unions' funds originate from a variety of sources: principally profits on their trading activities, and block grant from their parent institutions, paid out of funds deriving from a mix of public and private sources. NUS affiliation fees for 1991-92 amounted to £2·57 million, some 93 per cent. of a total NUS income of £2·76 million.

Special Needs

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies of his draft code of practice on the identification and assessment of special needs have been printed; to whom and how many an initial distribution was made; how many were distributed in response to requests; and if he will ensure that at least one copy will be dispatched to each maintained school in England and Wales.

Mr. Robin Squire: As of 15 December, a total of 23,000 copies of the draft code had been printed. The Department made an initial distribution of over 1,000 copies of a first print run of 2,500 to all local education authorities, social services departments and regional and district health authorities, as well as to other interested bodies, such as voluntary organisations and teacher unions.

The Department's distribution centre has distributed a further 22,000 copies of the draft code in response to requests. Our intention is, subject to Parliament's approval, to issue a revised version of the code in the early summer, to come into effect on 1 September. We shall send copies to all maintained schools and take steps to ensure that the code's messages are widely understood.

Music Education

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many hours on average of music education were available per pupil in*(a)* infant, (b) primary and (c) secondary schools in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will make a statement on Government policy in this area.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested for infant and junior schools is not centrally available.

Information is available for 1992 for secondary schools from the secondary schools staffing surveys which collected data from representative samples of maintained secondary schools in England. The table shows the percentage of total pupil periods recorded as having been spent on music for pupils in each year group.

Year group	January 1992
7	4·2
8	4·0
9	3·4
10	0·8
11	0·8

Music is a foundation subject in the national curriculum. For the first time, all pupils will complete a full and rigorous course in music, up to the age of 14. After 14, schools can offer pupils the opportunity to study music if they so wish.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in England are or have been eligible to apply for grant-maintained status; how many in each case have held ballots; how many ballots in each case resulted in votes to seek grant-maintained status; how many of these have been subject to section 12 or 13 notices; and how many ballots in each case resulted in votes against seeking grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what applications were received from grant-maintained schools for capital grant for the financial year 1993-94; and what has been the level of grant approved in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have placed in the Library copies of papers detailing the applications and allocations of named project capital grant to self-governing—grant maintained—schools in 1993-94.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, by local education authority, the schools which have held ballots on grant-maintained status as a result of a parental petition stating, in each case (a) whether the ballot resulted in a yes or no majority, (b) the number of registered pupils at the school and (c) the date the ballot closed.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information requested is set out in the table. The table does not contain details of pupil numbers for each school, which are taking a little longer to assemble. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as they are available.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the grant-maintained schools which have sought his approval for a change of character (a) by extending the age range of pupils for which the school provides and (b) by selecting pupils according to aptitude or ability, stating in each case whether their application has been successful.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list the grant-maintained schools which have sought his approval for changes in their admissions policy which (a) constitute or (b) do not constitute, a significant change in character; and if he will state, in each case, whether their application has been successful;

(2) if he will list the grant-maintained schools which have sought his approval for changes in their admissions policy to introduce the selection of pupils by reference to their aptitude or ability, stating in each case (a) whether this constituted a significant change of character and (b) whether their application has been successful.

Mr. Robin Squire: The grant-maintained schools listed in table 1 have published proposals under section 89 of the Education Reform Act 1988 to make a significant change in the character of the school by extending the school's age range or by the introduction of arrangements for the admission of pupils by reference to ability or aptitude.

My right hon. Friend has approved a large number of changes to the admissions criteria of grant-maintained schools which have not required statutory proposals. Table 2 lists those agreed or under consideration which involve selection of up to 10 per cent. of the school's intake of the basis of aptitude or ability in music, sport, drama, dance, art or technology. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible giving details of all other changes that have been approved or requested.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities have been required by his Department to justify the text of publications relating to grant-maintained status; how many of these publications have been found to be (a) misleading and subject to further action and (b) not misleading and hence not subject to further action; and how many local education authorities, or their officers, have been sent an apology for the unjustified suggestion that publications have been misleading.

Mr. Robin Squire: Over the past 18 months, the Department has corresponded with more than 60 local education authorities about publications relating to grant-maintained status. In nearly all cases, officials have pointed out and sought comments on potentially misleading statements in one or more documents issued by the authority. Where appropriate, local education authorities are asked to correct misleading statements and include the correct version in their future publications on grant-maintained status. The Department does not keep summary records of the outcome of this correspondence.

Primary Schools

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if primary schools, subject to local management of schools must meet the cost of administering, invigilating and staffing entrance examinations to (a) opted-out schools and (b) independent schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Arrangements for holding entrance examinations are a matter for the schools concerned, involving the LEA as appropriate.

Sex Education

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will incorporate the advice of the British Medical Association and others contained in the document

"Confidentiality and People Under 16" in the guidelines on sex education he is sending out for consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Consultative draft guidance on the new arrangements for sex education in schools in England was published on 6 December 1993, inviting comments by 18 February 1994. A copy has been sent to the British Medical Association. The draft guidance addresses issues of confidentiality as they apply to schools. Any views expressed by the British Medical Association or others will be taken into account in preparing the guidance in final form which we intend to issue to schools next spring.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the regional and area offices of his Department, of the Office for Standards in Education, of the higher, and further education funding councils, of the Funding Agency for Schools and of other public bodies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Boswell: The Department does not have separate regional or area offices. Of the Department's 2,255 staff, 1,200 are based in London and 1,055 are on five sites in Darlington.

The Further Education Funding Council has the following regional offices:

South East—Kings Road, Reading
London—Percy Street, London W1
Northern—Amethyst Road, Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Yorkshire and Humberside—Blenheim Court, Leeds
West Midlands—Quinton Road, Coventry
North West—Cornbrook, Manchester
East Midlands—Quinton Road, Coventry
South West—Blackbrook Park Avenue, Taunton
Eastern—Cowley Road, Cambridge
(The Council's new headquarters is also at Quinton Road, Coventry).

Other non-departmental public bodies for which my right hon. Friend has responsibility do not have separate regional offices.

In the case of OFSTED, I am asking Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member direct with the information.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Boswell: In accordance with recommendations made in 1990 by the Government's efficiency unit, the Department no longer routinely issues acknowledgements to letters which are to be replied to by Ministers. Of the nearly 3,500 ministerial replies issued between 1 September 1993 and 30 November 1993, 76 per cent. were issued within three weeks and 90 per cent. within four weeks of receipt of the incoming letter.

The Department does not collect the data requested for incoming letters which are to be replied to by officials.

In line with the Department's approach, the Teachers Pensions Agency does not issue routine acknowledgements. Between 1 April and 30 November, the TPA replied to 98 per cent. of ministerial correspondence and 85 per cent. of general correspondence within 15 days. The figures are based on the 80 per cent. of correspondence that is subject to detailed monitoring.

Teacher Training

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will name the institution to which he referred, in a broadcast interview on the BBC programme "The World this Weekend", on 14 November, as having provided no school-based experience during the first two years of a teacher training course; and if he will describe the action he has taken to remedy the situation.

Mr. Patten: It would not be appropriate to name an individual institution on the basis of comments made to me in confidence by a constituent. I am confident that the new criteria for courses of initial teacher training which I have published in recent circulars will, when fully implemented, ensure that all student teachers receive suitable classroom experience throughout their training.

Public Meetings

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what requirements are imposed on (i) maintained county and voluntary schools, (ii) grant-maintained schools, (iii) city technology colleges, (iv) colleges of further education and sixth form colleges, (v) the Funding Agency for Schools and (vi) the further education and the higher education funding councils, to hold meetings in public of the main governing body concerned, any committees, and any sub-committees; and what rights of access the public have to agendas, minutes, and reports to such bodies, committees and sub-committees.

Mr. Boswell: All these bodies are free if they wish, but are not required by law, to admit members of the public to meetings. Governing bodies of maintained county and voluntary schools, grant-maintained schools, and further education and sixth form colleges are required to ensure that copies of agendas, minutes and reports in relation to every meeting of the governing body are made available at the institution to any person wishing to inspect them. Material relating to named pupils or students and to staff, and to any members which the governing body regard as confidential, may be omitted.

National Curriculum Council

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list (a) the number of staff employed by the National Curriculum Council who were made redundant as a result of the dissolution of that council, (b) the total sum of redundancy payments received by staff employed at the National Curriculum Council and (c) the cost of relocating staff formerly employed by the National Curriculum Council and now employed by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 61 former employees of the National Curriculum Council—NCC—were made redundant at a cost of £1·76 million. The eventual cost of relocating former NCC staff who are now employed by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority—SCAA—is estimated at £0·7 million. These one-off costs should be set against estimated annual efficiency savings of £1·4 million as a result of dissolving the NCC and the School Examinations and Assessment Council and establishing the SCAA.

Special Purpose Grants

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the applications received and payments made for special purpose grant—restructuring—in respect of head teacher posts in grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not held in the form requested.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on capital allocations for local education authority maintained schools for 1994-95.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local education authorities have today been informed of their annual capital guidelines—ACGs—for schools which, together with supplementary credit approvals to be issued later, will total £403 million in 1994-95. They have also been informed of their allocations for capital and repairs spending by the governors of voluntary-aided and special agreement schools in their areas—the overall grant to be made available in 1994-95 will be £113·6 million. Provision for both sectors reflects the continuing transfer of local authority schools to the grant-maintained sector.

In distributing ACGs, we have again given priority to the second and third year expenditure on work approved in earlier years; basic need projects to provide new school places in areas of growing demand; cost-effective projects to remove surplus places.

Allocations in the basic need and surplus place removal categories are at historically high levels, reflecting growth in pupil numbers and the success of the pressures we have put on LEAs to remove spare capacity.

ACGs do not represent the full total of resources available to LEAs for capital expenditure. Authorities are also able to spend additional sums from capital receipts and from their revenue budgets if they so choose. The substantial sum available for 1994-95 should enable LEAs to continue to make significant progress in improving the school building stock.

Of the total of £113·6 million grant for voluntary-aided schools, £45·6 million has been set aside for repairs. The remainder—£68 million—is to be provided for capital work. A total of £18 million of this will support new work to provide for new school places, cost-effective removal of surplus capacity, as well as a range of improvement and replacement projects. Twenty-three major projects have been authorised to start and a further 29 to proceed to initial design work.

Details of individual LEAs' ACGs and grant allocations have been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Re-offending

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many instances of reoffending have occurred in the last three years in respect of offenders during home leave granted to prisoners who have been convicted of offences of violence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jonathan Evans, dated 17 December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many instances of re-offending have occurred in the last three years in respect of offenders during home leave granted to prisoners who have been convicted of offences of violence.

At present such information is not available centrally. We are considering whether and if so how such information can be available in the future.

Prisoners (Home Leave)

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of his review on the issue of home leave for dangerous or violent offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jonathan Evans, dated 17 December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the progress of the review being carried out by the Prison Service to review the operation of the home leave and temporary release schemes, particularly in relation to dangerous or violent offenders.

The Working Group set up to conduct the review has prepared a summary of its main conclusions and recommendations. These are now being considered.

Litter Louts

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many litter louts have been prosecuted under the recent legislation.

Mr. Maclean: In England and Wales in 1992 there were 811 prosecutions under section 1(3) of the Litter Act 1983 and 828 prosecutions for depositing litter under section 87 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Bail

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a commencement order under the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 so as to give the prosecution a right of appeal against decisions by magistrates to grant bail.

Mr. Maclean: We hope to bring the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 into force early in the new year.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the address of the centre for information, discussion and exchange on asylum and the name of its director.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The centre has no permanent address or director. Its meetings are chaired by the country currently holding the presidency of the European Union and serviced by the general secretariat of the Council.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations have taken place between institutions operating on the basis of the second pillar of the Maastricht treaty, on foreign and security policy and those of the third pillar, on justice and home affairs matters, on matters which relate to immigration and asylum policy.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It has been agreed that joint reports will be prepared under the auspices of the common foreign and security policy on the situation in third countries. These will be made available to member states via the clearing house for information, discussion and exchange on asylum set up under the third pillar.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given to matters concerning immigration and asylum policy at the meeting of the Justice Council which took place in Brussels at the beginning of December.

Mr. Charles Wardle: If the hon. Member is referring to the meeting of the Interior and Justice Council on 29 and 30 November, I would refer him to the reply I gave to him on 7 December, columns 165-66.

National Alliance of Women's Organisations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will approve in full the funding application made by the National Alliance of Women's Organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The request made by the National Alliance of Women's Organisations for funding in 1994-95 and beyond is among a number of applications currently under consideration by the Voluntary Services Unit. The outcome should be known within the next few weeks.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made to implement the decisions arising out of the December 1992 Edinburgh summit meeting on refugees from countries on which there is considered generally to be no serious risk of persecution.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for individual member states to decide whether to take any specific action in response to this conclusion. We have no present plans to formalise a list of countries meeting the criteria it sets out.

Charity Commission

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the reason for the Charity Commission determining that some of the payments made by the Foundation for Business Responsibilities to Marketforce Communications were unjustified; how much money was involved; how this money had been spent and by whom; how many of the donors to the Foundation for Business Responsibilities between 1987 and 1990 were interviewed during the Charity Commission's investigation into the Foundation for Business Responsibilities in 1991-92, to find their motivation for giving money to the charity; and what was the involvement of Dame Shirley Porter and Michael Ivens in these payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the course of the commissioners' investigation, the trustees of the Foundation for Business Responsibilities themselves had decided that there was substance in the suggestion that some of the payments made by the Foundation to Marketforce Communications Ltd. during 1989 and 1990 were not necessarily justified having regard to the services provided by Marketforce to the foundation.

The trustees decided that all payments made by the foundation to Marketforce during 1989 and 1990, totalling £98,897·96, should be recovered regardless of whether or not some of the payments were justified. This was done and the commissioners were satisfied that any possible misapplication of charitable funds had been remedied.

Michael Ivens, then director of the foundation, authorised the payments to Marketforce. The commissioners' inquiry did not reveal any evidence of involvement of Dame Shirley Porter in the payments.

None of the Foundation's donors were interviewed during the commissioners' investigation.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the conclusion of the Charity Commission's investigation into the relationship between the Aims of Industry organisation and the Foundation for Business Responsibilities; what prompted the investigation; and in what months the investigation was carried out.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The commissioners' inquiry into payments by the Foundation for Business Responsibilities to Marketforce Communications Ltd. showed that £62,390.09 had been paid by the foundation to Aims of Industry during 1988-91.

There was no evidence to suggest that the payments to Aims of Industry were otherwise than in providing legitimate services to the foundation—namely, management services, accommodation, research and printing works.

The investigation into the payments made to Aims of Industry was carried out between March and September 1992.

Police

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the Secretary of State for Transport concerning appraisal-related pay, in relation to transport-related functions of the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. We have made it clear that pay should be related to overall performance, which does not mean measuring it against crude indicators such as numbers of arrests or crimes cleared up, or in relation to specific police functions.

Bogus Charities

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what safeguards exist to prevent bogus charities collecting on the streets.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: If a person represents that he or she is collecting on behalf of a charity when that is not the case, this could amount to obtaining property by deception which is an offence under section 15 of the Theft Act 1968.

If in doubt about a collector's bona fides, members of the public should inquire whether or not the collector has the necessary authority by asking to see his badge or certificate. If the collection is said to be for a charity, a member of the public can ask whether the charity is registered with the Charity Commission. If someone has doubts about an organisation or collector soliciting donations, he or she should not give but should consider reporting the matter to the local authority, Charity Commission or police.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the work of the ad hoc group on immigration will be co-ordinated with that of the co-ordinating committee established on the basis of article K4 of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Following implementation of the treaty on European Union, the ad hoc group on immigration has been replaced by a group of senior officials, known as steering group I, covering immigration and asylum matters. Steering group I reports to the article K4 committee, whose role is to oversee and co-ordinate this and other intergovernmental work under title VI of the treaty.

Extradition (Zimbabwe)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the extradition arrangements between the United Kingdom and Zimbabwe; and if he will list how many people have been extradited from Zimbabwe to the United Kingdom in each year since the arrangements were made.

Mr. Maclean: Our extradition arrangements with Zimbabwe are governed by the Commonwealth scheme for the rendition of fugitive offenders. There have been no extraditions from Zimbabwe since that country's independence in 1980.

Seals

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide continuing protection for seals under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, following the expiry of the order laid under section 3(1) in 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have now laid before Parliament the Conservation of Seals (England) Order 1993, which provides permanent close season protection for common seals and grey seals for three years in an area stretching along the North sea coast from the border between England and Scotland to Newhaven on the south coast. The order will come into force on 19 December, to coincide with the expiry of the order laid in 1990.

Squatters

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to local authorities of dealing with squatters in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment that this information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has as to the number of squatters there are currently in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The nature of squatting makes it impossible to assess the number of squatters with any degree of accuracy, but estimates as to the total number of people squatting in England and Wales generally range between 30,000 and 50,000. More precise information is, however, available about the number of local authority dwellings under unauthorised occupation: on 1 April 1993 there were 2,963 local authority dwellings so occupied, of which 88 per cent. were in inner London: Hackney—1,152; Lambeth—327; Tower Hamlets—232; Camden—153; and Islington—135—being among the areas worst affected.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representatives he has received from (a) local authorities and (b) other sources in the last 12 months regarding squatters.

Mr. Maclean: During the last 12 months, we have received one representation from a local authority about squatting, and 139 representations from other sources including hon. Members, organisations supporting the homeless, retail groups and individual members of the public.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of incidents in the last 12 months where squatters were required to move and of the type of ownership applicable in the properties concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Squatters may be required to leave property in certain circumstances under the provisions of the Criminal Law Act 1977. No information is, however, collected centrally about the number of occasions on which this power is used.

From October 1992 to September 1993, 28,981 orders for possession were made by the civil courts as a result of actions for possession where the action was not a consequence of a default in mortgage payments. Of these, 8,203 orders were granted to private landlords, 5,715 to housing associations, and 15,063 to other social landlords, including local authorities. It is important to bear in mind, however, that these figures do not indicate how many properties were actually repossessed, as not all the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. It should also be noted that not all actions to repossess property are in respect of squatters, and there is no information as to what proportion of the figures given in fact relate to instances of squatting.

Homicide

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) female and (b) male victims of homicide there were in 1992; and if he will give a breakdown in each case in terms of their ethnic origin.

Mr. Maclean: There were 240 female and 382 male victims of offences currently recorded as homicide in England and Wales in 1992 as at 27 August 1993.

A breakdown by ethnic origin is not available from the statistics collected centrally.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the regional and area offices of his Department, Her Majesty's inspectorate of police, and of the Fire Service, of the Commission for Racial Equality, and of other inspectorates, agencies, and other public bodies for which he is responsible.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Howard: Various targets are set for acknowledging and answering different types of correspondence in different areas of the Home Office and its agencies. Information in the form requested by the hon. Member is not, however, readily available for the Department as a whole, nor for individual agencies.

Richmond Fellowship

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has received from the Charity Commission concerning his investigation of the Richmond Fellowship.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the commissioners' inquiry into the Richmond Fellowship has been concluded and that the charity appears to be on a stable footing.

Essex Police

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the strength of the Essex police force for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table. The latest figure available for 1993 is August:

Essex Police—Strength as at 31 December

Year
1984	2,649
1985	2,678
1986	2,718
1987	2,725
1988	2,763
1989	2,799
1990	2,884
1991	2,878
1992	2,917
1993 (August)	2,985

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where the five proposed secure training centres will be sited; and if he will list the county and region in which each centre is located and the counties and region or regions to be served by each.

Mr. Maclean: No final decisions have been taken about where the secure training centres will be sited or the areas which they will serve.

Category C Prisoners

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what point during a life sentence or a prisoner's term of imprisonment might he or she be considered for category C status.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Jean Corston, dated 17 December 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the point at which a life sentence prisoner might be considered for category C conditions.

In the case of male prisoners, there is no fixed point at which a life sentence prisoner is considered for category C conditions. Each case is considered on its merits and in the light of reports from the establishment in which he or she is held. Factors which influence the decision to move a life sentence prisoner to a category C prison are whether the risk he or she presents is commensurate with category C security; whether the prisoner has addressed any areas of concern, such as alcohol addiction, and the timing of the first review of his or her case by the Parole Board.

Establishments for women are not categorised on the same basis as those holding men. But the same general principles for a move to less secure conditions apply.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of police expenditure is devoted to crime prevention; and what steps he is taking to increase the proportion.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Many of the 128,000 police officers in England and Wales are involved in crime prevention to a greater or lesser extent but it is not possible to identify what percentage of police expenditure this represents. Nearly 1,000 of these officers are employed as crime prevention specialists. In 1992-93 the estimated expenditure on the police increased to £5·9 billion, an increase in real terms of 83 per cent. since 1978-79.

On 13 November 1992, following consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Home Office sent a circular letter to chief officers of police with the aim of consolidating and expanding crime prevention activities through each force. The circular recommends that each force should develop a crime prevention strategy and that specialist crime prevention officers should be integrated into local command management units in order to allow greater co-ordination of crime prevention and operational policing. Chief officers are encouraged to deploy beat officers for crime prevention surveys while employing the expertise of the crime prevention specialist within crime management teams.

Crimes Committed on Bail

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many defendants have committed further crimes while on bail in each of the last seven years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the seriousness of the crimes committed in the first instance, and those committed while on bail.

Mr. Maclean: Figures on the numbers remanded on bail are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", table 8·5. These are broken down by seriousness of offence into indictable, summary, other than motoring, and summary motoring. The figures for the last seven years are shown in the following table.

Number of persons remanded on bail

(Thousands)

Offence Group	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Indictible	248·1	268·0	277·2	271·0	304·6	314·7	321·8
Summary (other than motoring)	36·9	43·8	48·7	69·9	76·0	72·8	71·0
Summary motoring	28·8	33·5	38·2	51·7	61·3	65·0	65·9
Total	314·0	345·2	364·0	392·6	441·9	452·5	458·7

Information on the numbers offending while on bail is not collected centrally. A Home Office research report, "RPU report 65, Offending while on bail; a survey of recent studies", gives some information on recent studies relating to offences while on bail. The survey concludes that, on average, between 10 and 12 per cent. of defendants are subsequently convicted of an offence committed while on bail and nowhere was the figure more than 17 per cent. A copy of this report is available in the Library of the House.

Convictions and Acquittals

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many defendants have been convicted in (a) the magistrates courts and (b) the Crown courts in each of the last seven years; how many cases have been dismissed in the magistrates courts and how many acquittals there have been in the Crown courts; and what each figure represents as a percentage of the cases brought.

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the tables.

Immigration Procedures

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the European Economic Area agreement will have on immigration procedures.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As from 1 January 1994, when the European Economic Area agreement enters into force, nationals of Austria, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden will benefit from European Community rights of free movement and residence. Nationals of these countries will be treated in the same way as European Community nationals for immigration purposes. This means they may work here and reside freely in accordance with Community law and they will be admitted to the United Kingdom on production of a valid passport or national identity card and may use the separate channel for EC/EEA nationals at major ports and airports.

Active Termination of Life

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what inquiries have been made by his Department in connection with the statement of 11 November by Mr. Richard Turner of the western European department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, that non-voluntary active termination of life is a practice which occurs in the United Kingdom, although it is illegal; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many cases of non-voluntary active termination of life by medical personnel have been notified to his Department in each of the last five years for which figures are available; in how many of those cases prosecutions were brought; and in how many convictions were obtained.

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 14 December 1993]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to her question by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 14 December, column 574.

Drugs

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the findings of his Department's surveys of drug usage.

Mr. Maclean: I am today publishing a report by the university of Sheffield, "Drug usage and Drugs Prevention: the views and habits of the general public"; together with a summary of that report; and "Research Findings No. 7: self-reported drug misuse in England and Wales: main findings from the 1992 British Crime Survey". Copies of all three documents are being placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Policy Objectives

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the policy objectives of the Government which have been fulfilled since the general election of 1992.

The Prime Minister: Among the more important objectives fulfilled since the last general election have been getting inflation down and keeping it down so that it now stands at 1·4 per cent., the lowest level for 26 years; the continuing fall in unemployment, for the eighth month running this year; the achievement of a successful GATT deal which will benefit industry and consumers alike; the continuing rise in retail sales and manufacturing output; reforms of the education system to provide children with a better education and a wider choice of qualifications and parents with more information; an intensified fight against crime; the continuing progress with the citizens charter, with resulting improvements in public services; and further progress with NHS reforms and an increase in the number of patients treated.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister when he received a copy of the letter signed by members of the United States Congress, the Japanese Diet and right hon. and hon. Members appealing for a public inquiry on and review of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

The Prime Minister: A copy of the letter was received in my office on Monday 13 December and has now been passed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment for consideration.

Regional and Urban Policy

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if he will detail the duties of sponsor Ministers in relation to regional and urban policy.

The Prime Minister: The duties of sponsor Ministers in relation to regional and urban policy are set out in a note placed in the Library of the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 4 November, Official Report, columns 515-24, when he announced the package of urban and regional policy measures. A copy of that note has been sent to my hon. Friend. In carrying out their duties, sponsor Ministers will liaise as necessary with hon. Members.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy towards the correction of answers given to Parliament where civil servants responsible for drafting, or Ministers or former Ministers have told the Scott inquiry that they were inaccurate.

The Prime Minister: Lord Justice Scott's inquiry is still in progress: his conclusions will be published in the inquiry's report. The Government will respond to the report when it is published and hon. Members will then be able to table questions on the report and on the Government's response.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what contact, either by written communication or telephone or telefax, his office has had with Mr. Frank Machon of Glasgow in regard to matters raised at the Scott inquiry.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Machon wrote to my office once during 1991, and once in 1992. In addition, the Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) wrote on three occasions on Mr. Machon's behalf during 1992.

Ex-Ministers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to this answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 143, if he will name (a) the Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office who recieved a severence payment on 14 April 1992 (b) the Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office who received a severance payment on 27 April 1992.

The Prime Minister: Lord Belstead's appointment as Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office, ceased on 14 April 1992. On 27 April, Lord Cavendish resigned as a Lord in Waiting, but was erroneously referred to as Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office.

EC Directives

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his oral statement of 13 December, Official Report, column 686, if he will publish a list of the 17 directives which the European Council agreed should be repealed, withdrawn or amended.

The Prime Minister: The 17 directives are listed in an annexe to the Commission's report on subsidiarity, which has been made available to the House. The Brussels European Council on 10 and 11 December called for early action to put the report into effect.

Home and Justice Affairs

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister what matters were agreed in principle at the European Council in Brussels on 10 to 11 December concerning home and justice affairs; when such matters were debated in the House, or any of its Standing Committees; and when he expects publication of conventions of the European Union incorporating these matters.

The Prime Minister: The European Council expressed its determination to use the new provisions of the Maastricht treaty on co-operation in the field of justice and home affairs to the full. It noted the work which had already been done in these areas and approved the action plan prepared by the Interior and Justice Council, in particular in relation to a number of specific areas.

The Government followed the practice adopted for the former immigration/Trevi ministerial meetings and deposited in the Library of the House documents approved by the Interior and Justice Council on 29 and 30 November. The action plan and work programmes sent to the European Council have now also been placed in the Library.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department has made proposals for future parliamentary oversight of title VI work, which will include sending to Parliament important documents before they go to the Council. We look forward to the House's reaction to these proposals and to putting an effective scrutiny procedure in place. Any conventions that are found to be necessary to achieve the aims of the interior and justice programme of work will be dealt with in accordance with this procedure.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his office and (b) each of his office's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

The Prime Minister: My office aims to acknowledge correspondence within five days and provide a substantive reply within 15 days.

South Africa

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to encourage South Africa under a majority Government to join the Commonwealth.

The Prime Minister: While it will be for the new democratically elected Government in South Africa to decide on whether it should seek to return to the Commonwealth, Her Majesty's Government and their Commonwealth partners look forward to welcoming a non-racial and democratic South Africa back into the association at the earliest opportunity.

Civil Servants

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Prime Minister what Civil Service rules or guidelines exist in relation to contact between civil servants and hon. Members and their personal staff; whether there have been any recent changes to any such rules or guidelines; and if he will place copies of any such rules or guidelines in the Library.

The Prime Minister: There have been no recent changes in guidelines concerning briefing of MPs by civil servants.

It is an established principle that civil servants should not engage in activities likely to call into question their political impartiality, or to give rise to criticism that people paid from public funds are being used for party political purposes.

Accordingly, the following rules apply:

(a) civil servants in their official capacity are prohibited from attending conferences arranged by political parties;

(b) they may not attend meetings of policy or subject groups of the parliamentary parties;

(c) they may not attend all-party subject groups or committees except to accompany a Minister and to respond to factual questions;

(d) these rules need not inhibit factual briefing by officials of MPs on overseas or regional visits;

(e) Ministers may also arrange factual briefings by officials, for MPs of one party provided that a Minister attends the meeting and similar facilities are offered to MPs of other parties;

(f) Ministers should always be present when MPs are to discuss sensitive areas of public policy with officials.

Written briefing material provided by officials to Ministers may be distributed to Back-Bench Members provided that it would be released to any bon fide inquirer and that hon. Members of all parties may have access to it.

The rules do not prevent agency chief executives and managers of local offices, with the Minister's approval, from communicating with hon. Members about problems of individual constituents.

The convention governing pre-election contacts between senior civil servants and Opposition leaders was set out in my reply to a written question by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 27 November 1991, at column 527.

Post Office Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister when he received the report from the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on the privatisation of the Post Office; and if he has now completed his consideration of it.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of papers from colleagues at the Department of Trade and Industry arising from the review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office, both before and since the departure from the Government of my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle. No decisions on the outcome of the review have been taken.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out his views on the union between Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: I support it and will uphold it for so long as it remains the democratic wish of a greater number of the people in Northern Ireland.

Subsidiarity

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the European Commission's lists of (a) proposals which fail the subsidiarity test and will be dropped or changed and (b) Community laws which the Commission believes must be simplified or abolished, to which he referred in his oral statement of 14 December 1992, Official Report, column 24, on the European Council at Edinburgh; and what progress has been made in the past year on each of those directives.

The Prime Minister: The lists referred to by my hon. Friend were included as an annexe to the conclusions of the Edinburgh European Council, copies of which were made available to the House. Details of progress are contained in the Commission's report on subsidiarity, which has been made available to the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Goodlad: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. They are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Goodlad: The special advisers to this Department are Michael Maclay and Maurice Fraser.

Their duties vary.

European Election Boundaries

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress towards ratification of the new European election boundaries in each member country of the EC.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Ireland, Denmark, Belgium and Germany have notified the Council secretariat that they have completed the necessary procedures for the implementation of the Council decision increasing the number of seats in the European Parliament. All other member states have the necessary legislation in hand. They have committed themselves to completing the process in time for the European parliamentary elections in June next year.

Sudan

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the British Government are taking to further the peace process in Sudan and bring the fighting to an end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have welcomed the initiative of the Kenyan, Ugandan, Ethiopian and Eritrean Presidents to try to encourage dialogue between the Government of Sudan and the factions of the Sudan People's Liberation Army. With other European Union member states, we are addressing ways of putting further pressure on the parties to respond positively to mediation efforts.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the British Government are taking to ensure that human rights are respected in Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 16 December to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace), Official Report, column 767.

Entry Appeals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when was the last date on which appeals against refusal of entry to visitors were allowed; and how many non-appeal representations he has received from those subsequently refused.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Applications for visit entry clearances decided on or after Monday 26 July 1993 do not have the right of appeal following the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993. The information about representations could not be provided except at disproportionate cost. However, there has been no discernible increase in Members' representations on entry clearance matters.

Visa Applications

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring he is carrying out to ensure that a different entry clearance officer is examining second applications for visitors' visas after a refusal of the first application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 instructions have been issued to our posts overseas that, wherever possible, a different ECO should examine re-applications from people previously refused.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many individuals have put in a second application for a visitors' visa having had the first one rejected since the coming into force of the abolition of the right of appeal contained in the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: These figures are not available centrally. The information requested could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Kenya

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his new travel advice for Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest travel advice for Kenya issued on 17 November and is available to the public on BBC 2 Ceefax and from the FCO's travel advice unit, telephone 071-270 4129, fax 071-270 4228. It is as follows:

"Except as indicated below, game reserves and the main tourist areas at the coast are generally safe.

Visitors should avoid North Eastern Province, the Tana River district of Coast Province and the Isiolo and Marsabit districts of Eastern Province (apart from the Samburu Game Reserve and when accompanied by tour operators, the Shaba Game Reserve). Even when escorted, traffic on the Malindi/Garsen/Lamu road is vulnerable to attack. The road should not be used.

Exercise common prudence everywhere, but especially in the main urban centres, when travelling after dark and in isolated places. In particular, do not go about Nairobi or coastal towns on foot at night, and avoid empty beaches. Muggings can take place anywhere in the country. Armed car hijackings are prevalent in the Nairobi area."

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the policy and legislative changes introduced by successive British Governments to comply with the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights since 1963.

Mr. Douglas-Hogg: Judgments against the United Kingdom since 1981 are listed in the attached list. Pre-1981 figures would be available only at disproportionate cost as such records are not held by any one department.

Where no Government action is shown in response to the court's finding of a violation, this is because the judgment hinged on the individual circumstances of the case and no legislation or procedural changes were found to be necessary.

The judgments against the United Kingdom since 1981 are as follows:

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to improve nuclear counter-proliferation policies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We attach the highest importance to preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons. At its meeting on 9 December, the Defence Planning Committee and the Nuclear Planning Group of NATO, a copy of whose communiqué has been placed in the Library of the House, recognised the need for intensive efforts to prevent proliferation and to address and counter if necessary the associated risks to alliance security.

Iraq

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates and for what purposes Iraqi military personnel have been officially received in Britain since August 1990.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No such visits have been made.

Indonesia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of the human rights situation in East Timor is undertaken by his Department; and what representations are made by his Department to the Government of Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: We have consistently made clear to the Indonesian authorities our concern that human rights should be respected in East Timor. We raise our concerns whenever appropriate in the relevant international bodies and in our bilateral contacts with the Indonesian authorities. The most recent occasion was on 23 November during the visit of the Indonesian Minister of Research and Technology.

We monitor the situtaion in East Timor through reports from members of our embassy in Jakarta who have visited the territory. We also follow closely reports from others who are involved on the ground, including non-governmental organisations.

Ministerial Hospitality

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been spent on alcohol in Ministers' offices by his Department since 9 April 1992.

Mr. Goodlad: Ministers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the Minister for Overseas Development, have spent £54,087 on official entertainment from 1 April 1992 to date. It would involve disproportionate cost to calculate the proportion of this spent between 1 April, the beginning of the financial year, and 9 April 1992. There are no records readily available to show what proportion of this sum was spent on alcoholic drinks and how much on soft drinks, food, catering and other staff costs.

Honduras

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Honduras concerning violation of human rights and the whereabouts of missing persons.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amery: Her Majesty's ambassador in Tegucigalpa regularly reminds the Honduran authorities of the concern in this country over human rights and is in frequent contact with the Honduran human rights ombudsman. European Union ambassadors discussed human rights with the presidential candidates before the elections on 28 November.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the United Nations to hold the planned referendum on the future of the Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In his report dated 24 November 1993 the UN Secretary-General has stated that he hopes to submit a further report to the Security Council early next year, with a view to holding the referendum in mid-1994.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Goodlad: Statistics showing the response time of the Foreign and Commonwealth office, the Wilton house conference centre, our only agency, and the Overseas Development Administration to ministerial correspondence are contained in the reply given by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 23 March 1993, columns 550-54, to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson). Statistics for 1993 will be published early in 1994.

It is standard practice for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to acknowledge correspondence addressed to Ministers on the day it is received. The Wilton house conference centre does not issue acknowledgements, as it normally replies immediately. The Overseas Development Administration does not issue acknowledgements.

Russia

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the Government towards any expansion by Russia against republics that used to belong to the former Soviet Union; and if economic assistance towards Russia is dependent on full compliance with constitutional norms internally.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We, along with the international community, recognised as independent and sovereign the countries of the former Soviet Union when it broke up in 1991. The Russian Government did likewise. We have no reason to suppose that President Yeltsin intends to call that into question: the British Government would take very seriously any change in policy. We have provided economic assistance to Russia in support of democratic and economic reforms and will continue to do so on that basis. We are pleased that the Russian people have endorsed a new constitution providing a democratic framework and guaranteeing human rights.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 6 and 7 December.

Mr. Hurd: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 6 and 7 December. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs also attended.

The Council agreed the text of a joint declaration to be made on the occasion of President Yeltsin's visit to Brussels on 8 and 9 December, and the Commission reported on progress in negotiations for a participation and co-operation agreement between the European Community and Russia.

The Council agreed a code of conduct governing public access to documents held by the Council and the Commission, in accordance with a commitment entered into at Maastricht.

Following the Council's agreement on 4 October on a procedure for the publication of formal Council votes, the Council unanimously agreed a more automatic procedure for publishing votes on legislative acts, and a code of conduct for handling this in the Council.

The Council agreed new rules of procedure for its activities. Denmark, Greece and the Netherlands voted against. The rules have been revised to take account of the Maastricht treaty, the December 1992 Edinburgh European Council's commitment to greater openness, new procedures on CFSP and justice/home affairs, and a number of other minor editorial changes.

The Council agreed a directive which lays down detailed arrangements allowing citizens of the union residing in a member state of which they are not nationals to vote and stand as candidates in elections to the European Parliament.

Mr. Delors presented the Commission's report on subsidiarity. This was welcomed by the Council. There was some discussion of presidency proposals on the institutional changes required for accession of the EFTA countries to the union.

Mr. Delors introduced the Commission White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment which had been commissioned at the Copenhagen European Council. He stressed that the document was not aimed at increasing the powers of the Community or Commission. I and others regretted the absence of a full and substantive presentation to the Economic and Finance Council on the previous day.

The Council approved reports on the European Union's initiative to launch a pact on stability in Europe, which was subsequently confirmed at the Brussels European Council.

Ministers discussed with Lord Owen latest developments in the search for a negotiated settlement in the former Yugoslavia and the implementation of the Council's joint action on facilitating the delivery of humanitarian aid to Bosnia.

The Council adopted the text for a joint action by the European Union to prepare for and monitor the elections in South Africa on 27 April next year. The Council also agreed to consider soon the future relations of a democratic South Africa with the Union.

The Council received a report from the Commission on the recent EC/US GATT Uruguay round negotiations. There was broad agreement that significant progress had been made, although it was noted that it had not been possible to reach agreement on treatment of the audio-visual sector. The Council agreed that the Commission should pursue negotiations with other parties in Geneva on the basis of the understandings reached with the United States. It was agreed that the Council should meet again as necessary in the light of developments.

The Council approved a mandate for the Commission to start talks with Morocco on an updated agreement between the European Union and Morocco. The United Kingdom underlined Gibraltar's particular interest in this agreement and that this would need to be taken into account as negotiations proceed. The Commission also presented to the Council draft negotiating mandate for updated agreements between the EU and Israel and the EU and Tunisia. The United Kingdom urged that the mandate for Israel should be agreed at the 20 December FAC; the Council agreed with this objective.

The Council agreed a text to implement a language regime for the Community Trade Mark Office.

Liberia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of the human rights situation in Liberia is undertaken by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Although Britain has no resident diplomatic representation in Liberia, we continue to monitor human rights through contacts with relief agencies and the UN. We lent our full support to the UN investigation into the massacre at Harbel in June. We hope that the efforts of the UN and the Economic Community of West African States to restore peace to Liberia will lead to a general improvement in the human rights situation in the country.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Nelson: The number of press officers employed by Her Majesty's Treasury is as follows:

	Numbers
1986-87	10
1987-88	10
1988-89	10
1989-90	10
1990-91	10
1991-92	9
1992-93	9
1993-94	9

Information for the years prior to 1986-87 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the net revenue forgone as a result of the reduction in personal income tax for higher rate taxpayers introduced by the Finance Act 1988 and the total number of beneficiaries in each year by region.

Mr. Dorrell: Available information is given in the table. Some regional estimates are based on small samples and all amounts are given to the nearest £50 million.

Number of taxpayers benefiting and change in tax revenue resulting from abolition of rates in excess of 40 per cent.

[2] For 1990-91 onwards the figures relate to the number of taxpaying individuals following the introduction of independent taxation.

[3] Under £25 million.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many extra pence in the pound on the standard rate of income tax would be required in 1994-95 to replace, and raise a sum equivalent to, the total effect of the changes in taxation and spending announced in the March and November Budgets this year.

Mr. Dorrell: The total direct effect of the revenue and spending measures announced in the March and November Budgets is approximately £12 billion in 1994-95. The full-year yield from changing the basic rate of income tax by 1p is around £1·8 billion, so the basic rate would have to rise by about 7p in the pound to raise an equivalent sum.

This would be a far more damaging way of raising the funds required to get borrowing down than the measures announced by the Government in the last two Budgets.

Foreign Seamen

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time staff working for the Inland Revenue have responsibility for collecting income tax from foreign seamen working in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Dorrell: Most of the tax due from employed seamen, who are liable to United Kingdom tax, is collected by employers via the pay-as-you-earn system. Once the PAYE procedures have been set in place, it is estimated that up to two staff units are needed to deal with the tax affairs of foreign seamen.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the full amount of income tax collected in each month in 1993 from foreign seamen working in United Kingdom waters; and if he will make a statement; (2) if he will estimate for each month this year the amount of income tax due but not collected by the Inland Revenue from foreign seamen working in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that this information is not available.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give full details of the liability of foreign seamen working in United Kingdom waters for the payment of income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: Seamen who are not resident in the United Kingdom for tax purposes are liable to United Kingdom income tax on their earnings arising from duties within the United Kingdom, subject to the provisions of any double tax conventions between the United Kingdom and their home countries.

Private Finance Projects

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 233, if he will name the private finance projects contained in the appendix to the text of his speech to the CBI Scotland's annual dinner that have been completed, or, in the case of services, the contracts signed, and which are under construction, or, in the case of works, for which contracts have been signed.

Mr. Dorrell: The following projects have been completed or, in the case of services, the contracts for them have been signed:

Manchester Metrolink
Dartford-Thurrock River Crossing
Dialysis Centre, Sheffield Northern General NHS Trust
Relocation of Standing Committee on Post-Graduate Medical Education
Beds for the elderly, Greater Glasgow Health Board
Psycho-geriatric beds, Lanarkshire HB
Beds for the demented elderly, Lanarkshire HB
Beds for the elderly mentally infirm Grampian HB
Analyser equipment, Dundee Hospitals Trust
Welsh Development Agency joint ventures
Housing for Wales joint ventures
Local renal units, Wales

Contracts for the following projects, which are for works or leases, have been signed:

Jubilee Line Extension
Heathrow Express
Second Severn Crossing
South Yorkshire Supertram
Clinical waste incinerator, Oldham
Clinical waste incinerator, King's College Hospital
Magnetic Resonance Imager for Royal Victoria Hospital, Newcastle
Molecular Medicines Centre, Western General Hospital, Edinburgh
Nunnery Square development, Sheffield
Immigration Service detention accommodation
Royal Armouries New Museum, Leeds
Development of managed workspace, London
Belasis Hall Technology Park

In addition, development work for the Croydon Tramlink is under way on the basis of a contract signed with a group of private sector companies group.

The following projects in an active stage of preparation but contracts have not yet been signed:

Clinical waste incinerators, Plymouth and Ashford
Long-stay residential care unit, Barnet

Machinery and Plant

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are being made to publish the legislation which gives effect to his proposals on capital allowances for machinery and plant announced on Budget day.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue will today be making available the clauses which will implement the Chancellor's proposals on capital allowances for machinery and plant. These clauses introduce new rules which will help clarify the boundary between buildings, structures and land on the one hand and plant on the other; and new time limits for giving written notification of qualifying expenditure on machinery and plant for which a capital allowances claim may be made. The Chancellor's intention in bringing forward this legislation is to protect the Exchequer.

The legislation for these measures will be included in the 1994 Finance Bill. I will be placing a copy of the Inland Revenue press release containing the proposed legislation in the Library of the House of Commons.

Lloyd's

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give further details of his proposals for changes to the tax arrangements for members of Lloyd's.

Mr. Dorrell: The transitional administrative arrangements that will apply in the move from the present basis of assessing individual members to the new basis have now been finalised; these arrangements are subject to the legislative proposals being enacted in due course. The detail is set out in a note which is being placed in the House of Commons Library.

Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what was the number of staff in post in central Departments at 1 October.

Mr. Portillo: On 1 October 1993 there were 546,339 permanent staff in post in central Government, the lowest number in the post-war period. This is a decrease of 21,500 in the last year, the largest 12-monthly fall since January 1986.

Of the total staff in post, 497,783 were non-industrials and 48,556 were classified as being in industrial work. A summary staff in post by Department has been placed in the Library.

Tobacco Taxation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised from taxes on tobacco products in the last year for which figures are available.

Sir John Cope: The information available is as follows:

	Tobacco Duty receipts £ million	VAT on tobacco expenditure £ million
1992-93	6,041	1,520

Value added tax has been estimated from Central Statistical Office figures on consumers' expenditure on tobacco products.

Performance Measures

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what performance measures are being introduced to measure productivity gains and losses in each Government Department, non-departmental public bodies and next steps agencies.

Mr. Portillo: Measures on productivity and other aspects of performance are included in departmental reports, and in the annual reports of next steps agencies and non-departmental public bodies. Copies are available in the Library of the House. For agencies, information on these measures is also brought together in the "Next Steps Review 1993"—Cm 2430—published by the Office of Public Service and Science.

Golf Club Subscriptions

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Customs and Excise have resolved the position over who is exempt from registration for VAT on subscription cheques for golf clubs and sports clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise are currently considering the responses to their consultation paper on the scope of the VAT exemption for sporting services supplied by non-profit-making clubs and local authorities. In response to requests they will be holding further consultations about the detailed effects. I hope to make a further announcement in the new year.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 7 December, Official Report, column 238, what estimate he has made of the proportion of the reduction of the 1994-95 public expenditure control total that will be met by (a) public sector pay measures, (b) efficiency gain measures and (c) other proposals.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. The 1993 public expenditure survey set cash limits to departments' expenditure. The freezing of public sector pay and running costs will operate within those cash limits.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each of the changes to national insurance contributions and income tax for each Budget since May 1979, that raise more than £5 million in revenue, in 1993-94 prices, giving for each change the full year yield in 1993-94 prices.

Mr. Dorrell: Information in terms of money of the day is available in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" and "Autumn Statement" for the years in question. Reliable estimates of the revenue effects of measures from previous Budgets for 1993-94 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It is not appropriate simply to revalorise the orginal estimates by the change in the retail prices index because this does not take proper account of changes in incomes, profits, interest rates, and so on between the year to which the orginal estimate relates and 1993-94.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the increase to the average family's tax bill when taking into account (a) changes in excise duties and (b) the imposition of indirect taxes on air travel and most general insurance premiums.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 842.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much he estimates the cumulative effects of an increase in the rate of employees' national insurance contributions, the restriction in value of the married couple's tax allowance and of mortgage interest tax relief, and the imposition of VAT on fuel at 8 per cent. will cost the average family from (a) April 1994 (b) 1995.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Jones) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 1263.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the extra revenue the Treasury forecasts it will raise in (a) 1995-96 and (b) 1996-97 as a direct result of the proposals outlined in both this year's Budgets will be accounted for by (i) freezing personal allowances, (ii) indirect taxes and (iii) higher employees' national insurance contributions.

Mr. Dorrell: The answers are given in the table—rounded to the nearest percentage point:

Per cent

	1995-96	1996-97
Personal allowances	9	9
Indirect taxes	37	43
Employee NICs	13	12

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department, showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Sir John Cope: The Chancellor of the Exchequer's special adviser is Mrs. Tessa Keswick, and the special adviser to the Chief Secretary is Mr. David Ruffley. Their duties vary.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Sir John Cope: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. They are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Bank of England

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has now made an assessment of the advantages and disadvantages of an independent Bank of England.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is listening with interest to the many views expressed and will study with care the report of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee on this subject.

Flight Tax

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Scottish island and inter-island air services will be (a) affected by and (b) exempted from the new flight tax.

Sir John Cope: Based on details in October 1993 airline timetables, and information available about proposed changes in aircraft to be used on certain routes, but not allowing for any seasonal variations which there may be, the following Scottish island and inter-island services use aircraft which will be exempt from air passenger duty: Orkney inter-island and Shetland inter-island services and some of the services from Inverness, Glasgow or Wick to Orkney and from Edinburgh or Glasgow to Shetland. Other services from the mainland to the islands or between the islands will be taxable.

Budget Measures

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the consequences of the income tax and national insurance measures announced in the March and November budgets, for a married man with two children aged under 16 years with (a) an earned income of £20,000 and a mortgage of £50,000, (b) an earned income of £40,000 and a mortgage of £90,000 and (c) an earned income of £60,000 and a mortgage of £150,000 in both the 1994-95 and 1995-96 financial years.

Mr. Dorrell: The additional income tax and national insurance contribution liabilities are given in the table.

Additional income tax and national insurance liability[1] (£ per year) for married man[2] with

	Earned income =£20,000 Mortgage =£50,000	Earned income =£40,000 Mortgage =£90,000	Earned income =£60,000 Mortgage =£150,000
1994-95	348	676	676
1995-96	554	882	882

[1] Additional liability compared with 1993-94 regime. The 1995-96 figures take no account of statutory indexation of allowances and thresholds. The estimates are calculated using the current mortgage interest rate of 8 per cent., which does not take account of the reduction in base rate announced on 23 November.

[2] The presence of children aged under 16 years in a family does not affect income tax or national insurance liabilities. The figures assume that the married man has the full married couple's allowance. The effect of the March and November Budget measures on mortgage interest relief is the same for all mortgages of £30,000 or more.

American Depositary Receipts

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of stock exchange turnover by value is accounted for by American depositary receipts in United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Nelson: In the first 11 months of 1993, turnover on the London stock exchange in American depositary receipts in UK companies was £22·9 billion. Total turnover in United Kingdom equities on the London stock exchange, including ADRs, was £508·2 billion. ADRs therefore represented 4·5 per cent of the London stock exchange's total turnover.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total market value of holdings in American depository receipts issued on behalf of United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is not readily available.

Home Income Plans

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will direct the Securities and Investments Board, under section 105(9) of the Financial Services Act 1986, to exercise its powers on the question of failed home income plans.

Mr. Nelson: The power to carry out investigations under section 105 of the Financial Services Act has been transferred to the Securities and Investments Board. I have no power to issue such directions.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers the Securities and Investments Board has under the Financial Services Act 1986 to intervene with building societies and life assurance companies on the question of failed home income plans.

Mr. Nelson: The Securities and Investments Board has a wide range of enforcement and intervention powers under the Financial Services Act 1986. These can be exercised, where there are appropriate grounds, against persons carrying on investment business in the United Kingdom.

European Investment Bank

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the present borrowing limits of the European investment bank; what sum they have borrowed to date; and if he will make a statement outlining the manner in which the bank raises its borrowing.

Mr. Nelson: There is no quantitive limit on the bank's power to borrow; however, it will do so only to the extent that it needs to raise money to finance its lending operations. Its total outstanding lending is limited by its statute to 250 per cent. of its subscribed capital. Since this currently stands at 57·6 million ecu, lending is limited to 144 million ecu. During 1992, the latest period for which final figures are available, the bank borrowed a total of 12,920 million ecu, and at the year end, total outstanding borrowings stood at 67,949,420,610 ecu. The bank raises the bulk of its funds from the international capital markets.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table setting out (a) the amounts borrowed from the European investment bank in 1992 and (b) estimates for the amount borrowed in 1993 by British borrowers by category of borrower.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The information is as follows:

EIB lending to the United Kingdom

	£ million
1 January 1992 to 31 December 1992
Water and sewage projects in England and Wales	496·2
Private sector transport (including Channel tunnel)	264·5
Energy (power generation and North Sea oil)	520·0
Industrial investment	251·9
Local authority infrastructure (including water and sewage projects in Scotland)	263·0
Total	1,795·6
1 January 1993 to 31 December 1993 (provisional estimate)
Water and sewage projects in England and Wales	700·0
Private sector transport (including Jubilee Line Extension)	282·0
Energy (power generation and North Sea oil)	444·7
Industrial investment	55·0
Telecommunications	300·0
Global loan (loan to Barclays Bank for on-lending to small and medium sized enterprises)	100.0
Local authority infrastructure (including water and sewage projects in Scotland)	463·5
Total	2,345·2

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor fo the Exchequer what is the number and the total value of loans from the European investment bank in 1992-93 and so far this year, giving a breakdown between loans to the private sector and public sector.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 December 1993]: In 1992, the bank lent a total of £1,795·6 million for 27 separate projects in the United Kingdom, of which £263 million—seven projects—was lent to the public sector and £1,532·6 million—20 projects—was lent to the private sector. The final figures for lending this year are not yet available, but the latest information we have suggests that the bank may lend about £2,345 million to some 27 projects, of which £464 million—13 projects—may be lent to the public sector and £1,881 million—14 projects—may be lent to the private sector.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much assistance the European investment bank has given to (a) the second Severn crossing and (b) the Manchester light railway.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The bank has provided a loan of £66 million towards the construction of the second Severn crossing, and £15 million towards construction of the first phase of the Manchester light railway.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who is responsible for paying the interest on European investment bank loans paid to the private sector.

Mr. Nelson: [holding answer 16 December 1993]: All borrowers from the bank are responsible for paying the interest due on their loans.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list all the transport projects financed in whole or part by the European investment bank, giving the sum borrowed in each case;

(2) if he will list the transport projects in which loans from the European investment bank were made to the private sector, giving the sum in each case.

Mr. Nelson: [holding answer 16 December 1993]: In 1992, the latest year for which we have final figures, the EIB lent the following amounts to transport projects in the United Kingdom:

Promoter	Project	£ million
Eurotunnel	Channel Tunnel	139·7
Severn River Crossing plc	Severn road bridge	66·0
Gwent County Council	Road schemes	30·0
West Glamorgan County Council	Road schemes	23·0
Strathclyde Regional Council	[1]Road and other	100·0
South Glamorgan County Council	[1]Road and other	50·0
Humberside County Council	Road and runway extension	24·0
Lothian Regional Council	[1]Road and other	21·0
Greater Manchester PTA and Greater Manchester PTE	Manchester Light Railway	15·0
British Airways	Renewal of long haul jet fleet	58·8

[1] NB Only a part of these loans were intended to finance transport projects. The remainder was devoted to other infrastructure works.

Merit Pay

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government Departments, non-departmental public bodies and next steps agencies have introduced merit pay in the past five years; and how much extra money has been allocated to cover the costs of implementing this.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's policy is that pay systems in the public sector need to make a regular and direct link between an individual's pay and the contribution he or she makes to the organisation. Merit or performance pay has therefore been introduced widely in Government Departments and next steps agencies, and in those non-departmental public bodies with staff whose pay follows that of civil service grades. The cost of performance pay is part of the overall pay costs of each organisation.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The expenditure by the Department on advertising in the period 1988-89 to 1992-93 and during the past 12 months is shown in the table. Expenditure in 1985-86 was £42,000. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 10 December, Official Report, column 404. Figures for the other years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The use of executive search consultants is one option HM Treasury considers when making appointments to public bodies.

Executive search consultants have not been used by the HM Treasury in making appointments to public bodies since April 1992.

Debtor Countries

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in descending order the 30 developing countries with the highest percentage of debt servicing in relation to their national wealth, stating the percentage in each case.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The 30 developing countries with the highest percentage of debt servicing due in 1993 on long-term external debt in relation to gross national product—the best available proxy for national wealth—are:

Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what functions Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru has exercised and what information he has received on behalf of the Treasury Solicitor in respect of the Treasury Solicitor's shareholding in International Military Services Ltd.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply. Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru served as an assistant Treasury Solicitor between 25 January 1990 and 23 November 1992 when he was appointed as secretary to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. By virtue of his status as an assistant Treasury Solicitor he might in theory have been asked to perform duties on behalf of the Treasury Solicitor under the Treasury Solicitor Act 1876 in relation to the Treasury Solicitor's shareholding in International Military Services Ltd. In fact, having checked the relevant files, the record shows that Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru did not during that time exercise any function or receive any information on behalf of the Treasury Solicitor in respect of the Treasury Solicitor's shareholding in International Military Services Ltd.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Copyright Library (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to establish a copyright library in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend and I plan shortly to consider with Cabinet colleagues proposals for a review of the libraries given deposit status under the Copyright Act 1911. I would expect such a review to address, also, the case for a deposit library for Northern Ireland.

Libraries

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give the number and value of publications supplied by publishers to (a) the National Library of Scotland, (b) the National Library of Wales, (c) the Bodleian library, Oxford, (d) Cambridge university library and (e) the library of Trinity college, Dublin, on foot of demands from the Copyright Licensing Agency in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sproat: The information requested by the hon. Member is not held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member in due course and place a copy of my letter in the House Libraries.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since its establishment.

Mr. Sproat: My Department was established in April 1992.

From April to the end of December, my Department employed seven press officers.

This year, 1993, we have the same number of press officers.

Arts Expenditure

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the aggregate spending of English and Welsh local authorities on arts and museums for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Although no definite figures for local authority expenditure on the arts are available, it is estimated that total spending in England and Wales for 1992-93 amounted to over £200 million.

Total local authority expenditure on museums and galleries in England, as set out in my Department's annual report, is shown in the table.

	£ million
1989-90	126
1990-91	125
1991-92	134

Local authority funding for museums and galleries in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the average value of (a) corporate and (b) Government spending on the arts for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The table shows the total departmental expenditure on the arts for the relevant years as published in my Department's annual report, together with figures for total business support and the money produced by the business sponsorship incentive scheme:

£ million

	Total arts funding[1]	Total business support[2]	Total BSIS funding[3]
1989-90	162·1	n/a	6·9
1990-91	182·6	57·1	8·4
1991-92	212·1	65·4	9·3

[1] These totals include grant in aid for the Arts Council and Crafts Council; support for the BSIS and Government art collection and other arts support, including research.

[2] Including corporate memberships.

[3] Including awards made and sponsorship matched under the scheme.

Arts Boards

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions his Department has had with the North West arts board about the preparation of a corporate plan for the board and of published policies for the support of individual art forms.

Mr. Brooke: None. These are matters for regional arts boards to take forward in discussion with the Arts Council.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidance is given to arts boards on their criteria in the selection of arts organisations for appraisal, and in the conduct of such appraisals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Arts Council has provided guidelines to regional arts boards on such issues. Under the arm's-length principle, my Department has no involvement in them.

Departmental Bodies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the regional and area offices of his Department, of English Heritage, the tourist authority and boards, the Sports Council, the Arts Council, and of other inspectorates, agencies, and other public bodies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Sproat: My Department does not have any regional or area offices. Of those bodies for which my Department is responsible, English Heritage has regional offices serving the north, midlands, south-east, south-west and London; and the Sports Council of Great Britain has regional offices serving the north, north-west, Yorkshire and Humberside, the east midlands, west midlands, the east, south-east, south, south-west and Greater London regions.

The English tourist board provides funds to 11 regional tourist boards; the Arts Council of Great Britain provides funds for the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils and 10 regional arts boards in England. From 1 April 1994 responsibility for the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils will be transferred to the respective Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales. The Museums and Galleries Commission funds seven area museums councils.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Brooke: During the month of October 1993, my Department received 536 letters requiring a ministerial reply, including correspondence about policy matters relating to the work of my Department's executive agencies. Of those, 70 per cent. received a reply within 15 working days. My Department aims to acknowledge every letter from hon. Members within five working days.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The only appointment made to a public body by the Department of National Heritage since April 1992 which has been advertised is the regulatory adviser for the national lottery.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The Department has internal guidelines on public appointments procedures which supplement the "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures" produced by the Public Appointments Unit. In respect of identifying candidates for public appointments our guidelines make it clear that there may be a small number of the most important appointments when it would be useful to use executive search consultants. All proposals to do so must be cleared in advance with the Permanent Secretary. The only appointment where such consultants were used, and the cost, since April 1992 was as follows:

Appointment	Cost
Regulatory Adviser for National Lottery	£19,550+VAT

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for 1992 and 1993 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The cost of advertising by this Department in 1992-93 was £2,000. Expenditure over the last 12 months was:

	£
April 1993	12,800
June 1993	200
July 1993	800
August 1993	500
September 1993	700
November 1993	100

There was no expenditure in any of the other months.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total quantity of plutonium exported to the United States of America since 1963 in the form of experimental fast reactor fuel pins; how many fuel pins were involved; to which facilities in the United States of America they were sent; and what quantities of plutonium have subsequently been returned.

Mr. Eggar: For the period from May 1979, plutonium in experimental fast reactor fuel pins was sent by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority under international safeguards to the United States of America in financial years 1980-81, 1981-82 and 1986-87. The pins were sent for research work under the joint United Kingdom and United States fast reactor research programme which was completed in 1987. There have been no net transfers of plutonium—other than in gram quantities—between the United Kingdom and the United States arising from the programme. The specific details are a matter for the parties concerned.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has anything to add to the information conveyed to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil (Mr. Rowlands) in the letter of 27 September 1984 by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy, in regard to plutonium exports to the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: I have nothing to add.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on stockpiling plutonium in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the policies on plutonium stockpiling of those countries currently contracted to United Kingdom reprocessing plants for their spent nuclear fuel to be reprocessed and returned.

Mr. Eggar: The essential factors in any arrangements for holding stocks of civil plutonium, whether in the United Kingdom or overseas, are that—whatever the amounts being stored—they are held safely under international safeguards and subject to stringent internationally agreed standards of physical protection.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he first learned of the report commissioned by British Nuclear Fuels plc from Touche Ross on the economic viability of THORP; when BNFL made available to his Department a copy of the report; and what assessment he has made of its robustness.

Mr. Eggar: In view of its shareholding, my Department sees a large number of financial and commercial documents from British Nuclear Fuels plc on a confidential basis. It would not be appropriate to confirm whether particular commercially confidential documents have been made available any more than it would be for me to disclose the contents of any that have been seen. However, I can assure the hon. Member that all my Department's requests to the company for information relating to the economics of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant have been met in full.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those Ministers, Government Departments and officials to whom the Touche Ross analysis of the economics of THORP has been circulated.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Heseltine: My special advisers are Lady Strathnaver, Dr. Alan Kemp and Dr. Walter Eltis. Apart from Dr. Eltis, who is my chief economic adviser, the advisers do not have formal job descriptions.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Heseltine: Dr. Eltis has elected to be subject to the business appointment rules so that he can have full access to papers. Care is taken in the case of Lady Strathnaver and Dr. Kemp to ensure that they do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. Special advisers are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Gas Market

Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the gas market.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is giving careful consideration to the important issues raised by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the gas market, and will announce his decision as soon as possible.

Swan Hunter

Mr. Trotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in seeking the approval of the European Commission to the Government's proposal to provide intervention funding to Swan Hunter for the building of merchant ships.

Mr. Sainsbury: As a result of a number of discussions with directorate-general IV agreement has been reached on a proposal for making special intervention funding available for Swan Hunter, subject to certain conditions.

It is expected that this proposal will be considered by the Commission before Christmas.

I hope for a favourable decision.

Laboratory Agencies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the resources allocated to each of his laboratories and agencies in 1992-93 and 1993-94 in both cash and standard prices; and what resources were allocated to the central scientific advice functions in each year on a similar basis.

Mr. McLoughlin: Cash expenditure incurred by the Department's agencies which are under net running cost control in 1992-93 and 1993-94 is shown in the 1992-93 Supply Estimates class IV, vote 2 sections C and L to Q and in the 1993-94 Supply Estimates class IV, vote 1 sections E to J. Forecasts of expenditure and receipts for all the Department's agencies are set out in table 23, as amended, at page 41 of Cm 2204.

Scientific advice is provided to Ministers from many sources, including management units whose budgets fall within section C of the DTI Vote—Administration—in 1993-94 and section A in 1992-93. The amounts spent on central scientific advice are not separately identified. In addition, £527,000 and £414,000 was allocated to the office of the DTI's chief adviser on science and technology in 1992-93 and 1993-94 respectively.

The Department does not calculate expenditure in "standard prices".

Animals (Cosmetic Testing)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of animals used for testing cosmetics in the United Kingdom during the last 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: According to the information set out in the Home Office publication "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain 1992", in 1992 there were 2,164 procedures involving animals for the purpose of evaluating the safety of cosmetics and toiletries. This represented under 0·08 per cent. of the 2,928,254 procedures undertaken in the year.

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the value of exports and imports between the United Kingdom and Kenya during each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Information on the topic is regularly published in "Business Monitor MA20, Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress made in the study he commissioned through "Lloyd's Register" in October of conformity assessment for wind turbines.

Mr. Eggar: The study will establish a conformity assessment system for wind turbine generators. Work began in July 1993 and is scheduled to be completed in June 1994.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the response received by his Department to the seminar "Renewable Energy—A Commercial Opportunity", sponsored by his Department in London on 3 December; and if he will set out to whom he has made available the two guides on financing renewable energies launched at the conference.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has received a very positive response to the recent seminar on renewable energy. Copies of the guides on financing renewable energy projects were made available to lenders, investors and advisers attending the seminar. Further copies are being sent to financiers who have expressed an interest in renewable energy, but who were unable to attend. The availability of the guides is also being publicised through other events and publications organised by the energy technology support unit, acting for my Department. Both guides are available direct from the inquiries bureau at ETSU and copies have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to previous answers to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 15 January 1993, Official Report, column 852-53, and to the hon. Member for the The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 3 December 1993, Official Report, column 764. The total number of staff currently employed in the Department's press office is 34.

Radio Scanners

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to control the sale of radio scanners.

Mr. McLoughlin: Sir David Calcutt, in his review of press self-regulation, Cm 2135, recommended that the Government should give further consideration to the legislation covering interception of telecommunications with a view to identifying all significant gaps and determining whether further legislation is needed. The Government have accepted this recommendation in principle and are looking again at the details of the relevant legislation covering the use of radio equipment, such as scanners, which might be used to intercept communications. But we have no plans to place further restrictions on the sale of scanning receivers.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Loyden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the breakdown of electricity supply on Merseyside.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that a malfunction in equipment belonging to the National Grid Company led to a cut in electricity supplies in the Liverpool area to some 230,000 Merseyside and North Wales Electricity Board customers between about 13.15 and 14.30 on 13 December. NGC is conducting an inquiry and my Department's engineering inspectorate has called for a report of the incident.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Heseltine: Ministers in my Department have a 10-day, rather than a 15-day, target for sending a substantive reply to ministerial correspondence. The heads of my Department's agencies have the same target for ministerial correspondence from hon. Members which is delegated to them for reply. In the first 10 months of this year, performance against the target was as follows:

Percentage of substantive replies in 10 days

	Per cent.
Department of Trade and Industry	65
Companies House	46
Insolvency Service	96
Radiocommunications	100
Accounts Services Agency	100
Export Credits Guarantee Department	83
National Physical Laboratory	100
Patent Office	100

Other agencies not listed did not have any correspondence from hon. Members delegated to them for reply during the period.

My Department does not at present send acknowledgements, but hopes to introduce such a procedure shortly.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Straw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the regional and area offices of his Department, and of inspectorates, agencies, and other public bodies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Heseltine: The information requested is published in a number of sources, for example:

Civil Service Yearbook (HMSO)
Guide for Business (DTI)
PMS Parliamentary Companion
Vacher's Parliamentary Companion

which are available in the Library of the House.

Steel Redundancies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many made redundant from the steel industry in the Sheffield travel-to-work area have benefited from the iron and steel employees readaptation benefits scheme programme each year since its introduction.

Mr. Sainsbury: Detailed figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Blank Tape Levy

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which countries of the EC have not yet introduced a blank tape levy.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom has not introduced a blank tape levy; nor, to the Government's knowledge, have Ireland or Luxembourg. The Government also understand that there is no levy scheme in operation in Belgium, Greece, Italy or Portugal. However, we believe that in these four member states legislation for a levy is either planned or already in place.

Extended Warranty Schemes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department is taking to ensure that consumers are informed of manufacturers' extended warranty schemes at the point of sale.

Mr. McLoughlin: The means by which manufacturers and retailers inform consumers about the existence of extended warranty schemes is a commercial matter for them.

British Gas

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce his decision on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into British Gas.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 13 December 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is giving careful consideration to the important issues raised by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the gas market, and will announce his decision as soon as possible.

Toxteth (Funding)

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's funding in the Toxteth area of Liverpool.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 14 December 1993]: In the financial years from 1990 to 1993 my Department paid a total of £2 million in regional selective assistance and £113,000 in regional enterprise grant in the Toxteth area.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what his Department's policy is regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Guidance on the various ways of finding and selecting candidates for public appointments is given in the "Guide on Public Appointment Procedures" produced by the Public Appointments Unit. The use of executive search consultants is one option which may be appropriate for certain important appointments.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The Director General of Gas Supply, the Director General of Telecommunications and the chairman of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who is responsible for the security vetting of staff at BNFL; and what special precautions are taken for staff who have access to plutonium.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Security vetting of British Nuclear Fuels employees is the responsibility of the security directorate of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority which, in co-operation with British Nuclear Fuels, ensures employees are vetted in a manner appropriate to the nature of their work in accordance with Government policy. All plutonium is protected by appropriate security arrangements and is subject to strict conditions of nuclear materials accountancy and control.

Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many shipments of spent nuclear fuel flasks have, in the last 12 months, been transported to Sellafield and Dounreay from (a) Germany, (b) Switzerland and (c) Japan.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Information about annual receipts of irradiated fuel from overseas reactors is contained in the annual plutonium figures. Specific details of shipments of spent nuclear fuel from Germany, Switzerland and Japan to Sellafield and Dounreay are an operational matter for the owners of the spent fuel transported and for British Nuclear Fuels plc and the Atomic Energy Authority.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to use private funding as a means of matching European moneys allocated to the European regional development fund.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 December 1993]: United Kingdom Community support frameworks, which govern the use of grants from the ERDF and other European structural funds, already refer to contributions from private sources as well as from the public sector. Projects are being approved for ERDF grant which will be part funded from the private sector.

It is the Government's policy to encourage partnerships with the private sector for funding infrastructure investments. Government Departments will therefore give every consideration to eligible applications for ERDF grant for infrastructure projects co-financed by the private sector. ERDF grant will, however, be paid only when the economic benefit of the project in question accrues to the area concerned.

Warship Yards

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on access to EU intervention funds for United Kingdom warship yards.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 December 1993]: Negotiations with the European Commission have been under way since May this year to attempt to obtain access to the shipbuilding intervention fund for all warship-builders. It has become clear that the Commission will not amend the 1985 agreement, which removed warship-builders' entitlement to support for all four companies involved.

As a result of a number of discussions with directorate general IV, agreement has been reached on a proposal for making special intervention funding available for Swan Hunter, subject to certain conditions.

It is expected that this proposal will be considered by the Commission before Christmas.

I hope for a favourable decision.

DEFENCE

Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are used by the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation to assess (a) efficiency, (b) productivity, (c) product cost and (d) quality performance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for this matter falls to the chief executive of the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Captain D. Symonds to Dr. David Clark dated 16 December 1993:

1. In your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, you asked about the measures used by the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation (NARO) to assess efficiency, productivity, product costs and quality performance. Details of the measures are below:

(a) Efficiency is measured by comparing the time taken to complete the work with the Basic Time as defined in BS3138.

(b) Productivity is basically a measure of output per employee and is measured by:

where a DOU is a standard hour of work (as detailed in BS3138). (The Total Number of Employees does not include apprentices).

c. Product Cost is measured in 2 ways:

(1) Firstly

$$\text{Cost per DOU} = \frac{\text{Consumption Budget—Costs incurred by non NARO units}}{\text{DOU}}$$

(2) Secondly, product cost where the full cost of an item including labour, overheads and material costs are deflated using HM Treasury GNP deflator index.

(d) Quality Performance is measured by reviewing the weighted number of Allied Quality Assurance Publication non-conformances over a period.

2. If I can provide any further details I will be more than happy to do so.

HMS Malabar

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of HMS Malabar, Bermuda.

Mr. Hanley: HMS Malabar, a small Royal Navy base in Bermuda, has provided the United Kingdom with a valuable asset in what has in the past been a strategically significant location. In the changed environment, however, its strategic importance has greatly diminished, and after careful consideration, the Government have decided that the base should be closed in April 1995. The Government are most grateful to the Government and people of Bermuda for the support which they have given the base, and intend that continued visits by vessels of the Royal Navy will maintain the service's close association with the island.

Defence Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the export of three combat aircraft from the United Kingdom to India as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms;

(2) if he will make a statement on the export of 29 armoured combat vehicles, one combat aircraft and missiles and missile launchers from the United Kingdom to Saudi Arabia as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms;

(3) if he will make a statement on the export of five combat aircraft from the United Kingdom to Zimbabwe as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms;

(4) if he will make a statement on the export of one armoured combat vehicle from the United Kingdom to Papua New Guinea as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms;

(5) if he will make a statement on the export of 10 combat aircraft from the United Kingdom to the Republic of Korea as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms;

(6) if he will make a statement on the export of 25 battle tanks from the United Kingdom to Nigeria as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms;

(7) if he will make a statement on the export of four large-calibre artillery systems from the United Kingdom to Brazil as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms;

(8) if he will make a statement on the export of missiles and missile launchers from the United Kingdom to the United Arab Emirates as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms.

Mr. Hanley: In accordance with the requirements of the United Nations arms register, the United Kingdom has reported a number of defence equipment exports. However, it is not our practice to comment on the detail of individual defence export contracts.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the export of eight large-calibre artillery systems from the United Kingdom to Nepal as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms; and for what reasons this appeared in the submissions by Nepal, but not that by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: No large-calibre artillery systems were transferred to Nepal in 1992.

Porton Down

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration has been given to the establishment of an ethics committee for experiments involving animals at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter delegated to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 16 December 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what further consideration has been given to the establishment of an ethics committee for experiments involving animals at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down (Question 17, Order Paper 14 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our present arrangements for the identification and scrutiny of proposed animal experimentation at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down demonstrate that we have an essentially independent review of all proposals for animal experiments outside the line management chain which provides us with many, if not all, of the advantages of an Ethics Committee for animal experiments.

3. Under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act of 1986, CBDE is required to seek both personal and project licenses. We have just completed the first five year review of the project licenses and this has been accomplished without any difficulties although we recognise that the project licenses are now being drawn up in a more stringent way. The Home Office Inspectorate, supported by the Animal Procedures Committee, provides an independent review of our work with animals. We also comply with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons cost of practice for named veterinary surgeons employed on scientific procedures establishments and breeding and supplying establishments under the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

4. When members of CBDE are considering a new project license, they first discuss the proposed license with their line manager and the Superintendent of their Division to confirm that there is indeed a need for animal experiments and that the information required cannot be obtained by another means. They then draft the experimental protocol that will, if approved, form the basis of the license. The next step is to discuss this with our Named Veterinary Surgeon who is free to bring any concerns she may have to the attention of my Director of Life Sciences or to myself. Our veterinary surgeon provides an independent assessment of the project in which informal discussion may take place with the Home Office Inspectorate. Following this, the project licence application is submitted formally to the Home Office Inspectorate over the signature of my Director of Life Sciences. The Home Office Inspectorate may, it they wish, submit a project license application to its own Animal Procedures Committee. I take a personal interest in all of this as the certificate holder for the Establishment under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 and I review all aspects of our work with animals at six monthly meetings.

5. In respect of our consideration as to whether to establish an ethics committee for animal experiments, we are having discussions with experts in academia concerning the pros and cons of an ethics committee; whilst there would be presentational advantages, there would clearly be additional work and potential delay imposed by the introduction of a further review process. We are continuing our discussions and at this stage have not yet decided whether an ethics committee would present significant added value over the present arrangements with the Home Office.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many laboratories under the control of his Department have ethics committees for experiments involving animals.

Mr. Hanley: None.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Ethics Committee for experiments involving humans at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, was first established.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter delegated to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 16 December 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when the ethics committee for experiments involving humans at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, was first established (Question 42, Order Paper, 14 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment Ethics Committee was established in July 1991. This Committee follows the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians of London and its membership includes lay members, members of both sexes from the local community, a nurse and a general medical practitioner.

3. The Ethics Committee has subsumed previous arrangements for the ethical review of proposed volunteer studies. For some 30 years, a committee on the safety of human experiments had been set up at this Establishment involving all the medical officers on the staff of the Establishment whose task was to review all the protocols for proposed volunteer studies to ensure that they were as safe as possible; this committee had the right of veto. Following such reviews, protocols were then considered by an ethical sub group of the Medical Committee of the Defence Scientific Advisory Committee which involved independent experts.

Defence Imports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the importing of 6,888 missiles and missile launchers from Germany as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms.

Mr. Hanley: For operational reasons it is not our practice to comment on the import of missiles and missile launchers.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the importing of one armoured combat vehicle from Canada as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms.

Mr. Hanley: The armoured combat vehicle was imported for use as a museum exhibit.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the importing of 14 large-calibre artillery systems from France as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement gave the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson), Official Report, column 605, on 1 December 1993.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the importing of one battle tank from the Russian Federation as listed in the United Nations register of conventional arms.

Mr. Hanley: The tank was imported for defence research and development purposes.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which British nuclear tests at the Nevada test site were carried out in association with (a) Los Alamos National Laboratory and (b) Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory.

Mr. Hanley: The information is given inthe table. Information is not readily available to confirm the United States host laboratory for the first three tests, namely Pampas, Tendrac and Cormorant, but it is believed that all three were carried out in conjunction with the Los Alamos national laboratory.

Small Arms Cartridges

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 41, when production in the United Kingdom of manufacture of the propellant powder for small arms cartridges known as small arms nitro compound ceased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Production in the United Kingdom ceased in December 1992.

Contracting Out

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he proposes to safeguard military and naval security in making decisions to contract out work at the Hydrographic Office and the Military Survey.

Mr. Hanley: Private contractors undertaking work on behalf of the Hydrographic Office, the Directorate General Military Survey or any other defence agency are contractually obliged to conform to strict guidelines and to implement protective security measures, laid down by the Ministry of Defence, appropriate to the classification and sensitivity of the work undertaken. Adherence to these guidelines and directives is monitored under the Department's standard monitoring arrangements.

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of depleted uranium shells are stored at the Dundrennan and West Freugh test sites in advance of experimental test firings.

Mr. Hanley: No stocks of depleted uranium projectiles are kept at test and evaluation establishment West Freugh. No DU trials have taken place there since 1990 and we have no plans to hold any more.

The stocks held at T and EE Kirkcudbright vary depending on the nature of a particular trial and the intensity of the trials firing programme. On 15 December 1993, 111 rounds were held at the range in anticipation of a number of trials.

Beryllium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what testing facilities beryllium is used by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: Testing of beryllium is carried out at atomic weapons establishment sites.

Aldermaston

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in what form and quantity (a) chromium, (b) acetone, (c) aluminium hydroxide, (d) ammonium persulphate, (e) benzene, (f) butyl acetate, (g) cadmium, (h) carbon tetrachloride, (i) chloroform, (j) copper, (k) cyanide, (l) 1, 2-dichloroethane, (m) 1, 1-dichloroethylene, (n) ethanol, (o) ethyl acetates, (p) ferric chloride, (q) hexachlorobutadiene, (r) hydrochloric acid, (s) hydrofluoric acid, (t) lanthanum, (u) lead, (v) lithium chloride, (w) manganese, (x) mercury and (y) methyl chloride are used by the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston;

(2) in what form and quantity (a) methylene chloride, (b) methyl ethyl ketone, (c) molybdenum, (d) nickel, (e) nitrates, (f) nitric acid, (g) phosphoric acid, (h) selenium, (i) silver, (j) sodium hydroxide, (k) sodium nitrate, (l) sodium thiosulphate, (m) sulphuric acid, (n) tetrachloroethylene, (o) thallium and (p) toluene are used by the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Hanley: Like any major industrial site, university and school laboratory, AWE Aldermaston uses a wide and varied range of chemicals. It is not possible to list the form and quantity in which they are used without disproportionate cost.

Research and Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the spending on research and development in each of the last five years given in 1992-93 prices in his Department.

Mr. Hanley: The expenditure on research and development by the Ministry of Defence for the last five years, at constant prices, is given in table 2.3.2 of the "Cabinet Office Annual Review 1993", page 38. The base year for these figures is 1991-92. Those for 1992-93 are not yet available.

Merchant Ships

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will hold a public inquiry into the chartering of merchant ships during the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There is no intention to hold a public inquiry into the chartering of merchant ships during the Gulf conflict. My Department's internal auditors fully investigated all aspects of the chartering of merchant ships during the Gulf conflict and their recommendations are being implemented. In addition, the National Audit Office has issued a report into the movements of personnel, equipment and stores to and from the Gulf, which drew heavily on the internal auditors' findings. The accounting officer has given evidence to the Public Accounts Committee and publication of the PAC report is imminent. The Department will respond to that Committee's observations in the usual manner.

Staff Christmas Party

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much of his Department's money has been authorised for the 1993 staff Christmas party;

(2) what was the cost of his Department's 1992 staff Christmas party, including man hours lost.

Mr. Hanley: Each year, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, his ministerial colleagues and the staff of the ministerial offices host a party to thank departmental officials and their military colleagues for the work and support given during the year and 1992 and 1993 were no exception. The costs of these events are met by Ministers and the staff of the ministerial offices. The events take place out of office hours and, apart from a few staff hours of preparation beforehand, no staff hours were lost.

Iraqi Military Personnel

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates and for what purposes Iraqi military personnel have been officially received in Britain since August 1990.

Mr. Hanley: No such visits have been made.

Ministerial Hospitality

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on ministerial hospitality by his Department since 9 April 1992.

Mr. Hanley: Since 9 April 1992 some £105,000 has been spent on ministerial hospitality from the defence budget.

Official Cars

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many official cars are currently at the disposal of his Department; and how much of his Department's budget has been allocated for their provision in the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: The number of staff cars in use are as follows:

Type	Army	RAF	Navy	Total
Grade A	[1]81	30	43	154
Grade B	[1]828	722	334	1,884
Grade C	[1]877	545	210	1,632
Totals	1,786	1,297	587	3,670

[1] The Army listings include vehicles held in the London district and other pools for the use of ministers and civil servants

The current grade A car is the Rover 825D, the current grade B car is the Rover Montego Diesel and the current grade C car is the Vauxhall Corsa Diesel. The estimated expenditure in 1993-94 is some £8,545,000.

Overseas Visits

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent by his Department on travelling abroad by (a) Ministers and (b) officials in each of the last three financial years; and which countries were visited.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not recorded centrally in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Generals

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the ratio of officers of general and equivalent ranks to other ranks in each of the three services in 1979, 1990 and 1993.

Mr. Hanley: The ratios of senior officers—major general equivalents and above—to other ranks in each of the three services for the dates specified is as follows:

Date	RN	Army	RAF	All
1 January 1979	1:948	1:1,383	1:1,124	1:1,187
1 January 1990	1:905	1:1,578	1:1,240	1:1,285
1 January 1993	1:989	1:1,615	1:1,228	1:1,321

Other ranks are warrant officers, non-commissioned officers, ratings and equivalents. These ratios exclude locally enlisted personnel.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Hanley: The Department does not maintain central records of correspondence received from members of the public, although the aim is to provide at least an initial reply within 15 working days—20 working days in the case of complaints about low flying. For letters from hon. Members, in 1993 up to the end of September, 100 per cent. received an acknowledgement within five days of receipt and 77 per cent. were answered within 15 working days.

All defence agencies aim to provide a reply within 15 working days and I understand that this is achieved in the vast majority of cases, but they are not required to maintain statistics on their performance in dealing with correspondence.

Submarine Exercises

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the (a) duration, (b) locality and (c) involvement of representatives of fishermen's associations in all the submarine exercises carried out off the west coast of Scotland in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is available only for major planned exercises involving one or more submarines.

JMC=Joint Maritime Course
CXAs=Clyde Exercise Areas

Both SMCCs were notified to fishermen at the Clyde fisheries liaison meeting on 4 December 1992 and the programmes for these exercises were widely distributed to fishermen's associations. Advance notice of all three JMCs was issued through notices to fishermen. Additionally, a detailed programme for JMC 933 was sent to fishermen's associations.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve the safety and reliability of British nuclear weapons.

• Mr. Hanley: We are confident in the safety and reliability of our in-service warheads and that Trident will enter service as a safe and reliable system. We intend to maintain the highest levels of safety and reliability.

Nuclear Transport

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if vehicles carrying nuclear warheads on public roads are obliged to display radiation hazards signs.

Mr. Hanley: Requirements for the display of such hazard signs are set out in the Radioactive Substances (Carriage by Road) Regulation 1974, as amended in 1985. Paragraph 20 of these regulations provides an exemption in the case of the carriage of nuclear weapons.

Honduras Armed Forces

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is offered to officers of the Honduras armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: No training is currently on offer to the Honduras armed forces.

Ammunition and Propellant

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which foreign companies currently supply the armed services with ammunition and propellant.

Mr. Hanley [pursuant to the reply 8 December 1993, c. 292]: The following firms were inadvertently omitted from the list of overseas companies which currently supply the Ministry of Defence with ammunition and propellant:

Aerospatiale—France
Rheinmetall—Germany
Raufoss—Norway
Sumdstrand Corporation—United States of America

HEALTH

NHS Management Board

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions, during the period that he was chief executive of the NHS management board, Sir Leonard Peach signed documents indicating that he would have no personal involvement in any action of the NHS management board regarding the purchase and use of information technology systems on the ground of potential conflict of interest; and if she will provide a list of those occasions and the contracts to which they referred.

Dr. Mawhinney: I will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Orthodontic Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were refused orthodontic treatment at Guy's hospital in 1993; and how many children by health authority were refused treatment in 1993 because of the limitation of extra-contractual referrals.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Guy's and St Thomas's hospital trust, Lord Hayhoe, about orthodonic treatment at Guy's hospital.

Charitable Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what purposes a regional health authority is authorised to apply the charitable trust acquired by reason of the distribution of the national fund in 1974.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities that hold charitable funds on trust are required to administer them for the purposes specified in the trust instruments.

NHS Trusts (Salaries)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table setting out the current salaries of the chief executives of all the trusts within the Greater London area, and indicating the percentage increase received by each chief executive in the course of the last 12 months.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

General Practitioners

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number of unrestricted general practitioners in the 12 family health services authority areas which fall wholly or partly within the London initiative zone in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table:

1. Data are not yet available for October 1993.
2. Figures may have been affected by the introduction of statutory retirement for GPs from April 1991.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she takes in the event of a dispute between a contractor and an NHS trust to ensure that the trust has acted wholly within the law.

Mr. Sackville: Where a dispute about a national health service contract is referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under section 4(3) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, my right hon. Friend may either determine the matter or appoint another person to consider and determine it in accordance with the National Health Service Contracts (Dispute Resolution) Regulations 1991.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total numbers of chairpersons and non-executive board members of NHS trusts in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 December Official Report, column 817.

Resource Management

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure in England on resource management in each year since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The total of funds made available in the years 1988-89 to 1993-94 to regional health authorities, special health authorities, and trusts in England for resource management will be £291·813 million. The amount each year is:

Year	£ million
1988-89	2·300
1989-90	20·839
1990-91	68·525
1991-92	86·688
1992-93	83·294
1993-94	30·167

The amount in 1988-89 relates to funds made available to the pilot sites which were part of the resource management initiative. The resource management programme, including a regional infrastructure and the initial allocations to the first wave of acute hospital sites began in 1989-90—hence the increase in funds made available. As sites throughout England have joined the programme and have progressed through the implementation the central funds made available have reflected this pattern. A sum of less than £9 million is expected to be required from central funds in 1994-95 and a final sum of about £0·5 million in 1995-96.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the name and job description [illegible] each special ministerial adviser employed in her Department, showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has one special adviser, Mr. Richard Marsh, who advises on matters relating to health and social services.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in her Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Sackville: The special adviser to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is not given access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. He is not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of her Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Census, Tower Hamlets

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the percentage of people answering Somali to the ethnic group question in the 1991 census by enumeration district within Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the figures from the 1981 and 1991 census returns for Tower Hamlets for (a) the method of daily travel-to-work statistics in percentages, (b) the hours worked on average per employed person per week and (c) the numbers of people who have a degree or professional/vocational qualification by type.

Mr. Sackville: The percentage of employees and self-employed people resident in Tower Hamlets travelling to work by various means of transport, as recorded in the 1981 and 1991 censuses, are shown in the table.

Means of travel to work	Percentages 1981	1991
British Rail	1·6	2·4
Other rail (including underground)	19·1	25·2
Bus	29·3	16·8

On foot	20·7	18·9
Works at home	2·2	2·5

Total employees and self-employed	100·0	100·0

The average hours worked per person per week, estimated from the results of the 1991 census for all employees and self employees and self employed in Tower Hamlets, was 36·4. In this estimate, it is assumed that those working 61 hours or more per week worked 70 hours. There are no comparable figures for 1981, as a question on hours worked was not asked in the 1981 census.

The estimated number of residents in Tower Hamlets with degrees or professional or vocational qualifications, as recorded in the 1981 and 1991 censuses, are shown in the table.

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to fluoridate all potable water supplies.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government believe that fluoridation is a safe and effective way of improving oral health and encourage the setting up of fluoridation schemes wherever it is practicable to do so. Decisions about the fluoridation of water supplies [illegible] however, properly taken at a local level.

Medical Devices Directorate

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the planned salary bill to her Department for the current financial year of the medical devices directorate, separately distinguishing the numbers of personnel employed at each salary scale.

Mr. Sackville: The directorate is responsible for ensuring that medical devices and equipment for sale or use in the United Kingdom meet acceptable standards of safety, quality and effectiveness and that these standards comply with relevant European Community directives. It is responsible for evaluation of medical devices and for good manufacturing practice standards in the field of medical devices.

The estimated cost of staff in the medical devices directorate for 1993-94, excluding temporary appointments, is £4·93 million. The whole-time equivalent number of staff, by grade, working in the directorate on 1 December 1993, excluding temporary appointments, was one grade 4; two grade 5; two senior medical officers; six grade 6; one nursing officer; three grade 7; 20·5 principal professional and technical officers; four senior executive officers; 44 senior professional and technical officers; one pharmaceutical officer 1; five higher executive officers; 25·5 higher professional and technical officers; one administration trainee; 17 executive officers; two professional and technical officers; 20 administrative officers; five administrative assistants; two senior personal secretaries; 6·5 personal secretaries.

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many posts for salaried dentists in England have been advertised for each health authority area; how many inquiries were received for the post; how many applications were received for each post; and how many appointments have been made.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are currently 88 salaried dentists in post. The remaining information is not available centrally.

Homeless Mentally Ill People

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consultation was undertaken with local authorities before the homeless mentally ill initiative was launched; what responsibilities local authorities have had in each year of the initiative for finding revenue support for the projects located in their areas; what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment on this subject; and if she will make a statement;

(2) how many schemes under the homeless mentally ill initiative in London have required Department of Health funding for care support; if she will list each scheme, showing the original date of application, the amount of Housing Corporation grant approved, the number of bed spaces and her Department's decision on funding in each case; and if she will make a statement;

(3) if she will make a statement on the progress of the homeless mentally ill initiative to provide housing and care support for homeless mentally ill persons in London.

Mr. Bowis: Five hostels offering temporary accommodation for homeless mentally ill people have been opened under the homeless mentally ill initiative—HMI. A further five are planned. All capital costs are being met by the Department of Health, as are the revenue costs, averaging £15,000 per bed space. No capital has been provided by the Housing Corporation for these hostels. There are plans to provide permanent accommodation for those currently in the hostels so that they can move on once they are ready to do so. The capital costs of this will be funded by the Housing Corporation. The table shows the hostels opened or planned and gives the number of spaces provided and the date of application.

Ministers in all relevant Departments, including the Department of the Environment, were closely involved in discussions during the development of the HMI and meetings were held with all statutory authorities at that crucial state. Officials at the Department of Health continue to collaborate with local authorities, in view of their duties and responsibilities arising from the National Assistance Act 1948, and they also liaise closely with colleagues in the Department of the Environment, the Housing Corporation and the regional health authorities involved in the HMI.

By 1994-95, over £20 million will have been spent in offering accommodation and psychiatric care to mentally ill people sleeping rough on the streets of London under the HMI. In addition to the provision of short-stay hostels, we have set up five multi-disciplinary community psychiatric teams who have made contact with people who many had written off as being beyond help. The initiative has raised the profile of homeless mentally ill people and, together with the Department of the Environment's rough sleepers initiative, has been instrumental in reducing numbers sleeping on the streets.

Health and Safety

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance is given by her Department to employing bodies within the national health service on the enforcement of health and safety regulations;

(2) if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on the enforcement of health and safety regulations in the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service management executive guidance EL(93)66 draws NHS employers attention to the importance of achieving a high standard of health and safety management at work. It refers to the serious consequences of failing to comply with health and safety legislation and gives particular emphasis to the new requirements of the regulations that came into effect in January this year. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of consultant-led occupational health services in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Tobacco Advertising

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the banning of tobacco advertising was discussed at the meeting of the EC Health Ministers on 13 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The draft European Community directive on tobacco advertising was discussed by the Health Council on 13 December and was remitted for further consideration. The United Kingdom Government continue to oppose the draft directive on the basis that it is not necessary for the completion of the single market.

Dental Handpieces

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make it mandatory on manufacturers of dental handpieces to issue with each handpiece instructions as to its sterilisation.

Dr. Mawhinney: A European Council directive due to come fully into force in 1998 will make it mandatory for manufacturers to include information on the method of sterilisation of dental handpieces.

Research Units

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the future of (a) the national perinatal epidemiology unit and (b) all other Department of Health-funded research units.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 26 November, at columns 242-44, and to the reply my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) gave the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 29 November, at columns 300-1.

Psychiatric Nurses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what ratio of trained psychiatric nurses to population is the agreed formula for the provision of suitable levels of care outside hospitals;

(2) what provision she intends to make for psychiatric nursing care in the community.

Mr. Bowis: There is no formula. Service providers, in discussion with purchasers, must determine the numbers and grades of staff that are deployed in the community.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric nurses were employed in Crewe district health authority in (a) 1980, (b) 1990 and (c) 1993; and what were the numbers of redundancies among such staff in each of these years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the South and East Cheshire health authority for this information.

St. Cross Hospital

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 December 1993, from how many people she has received representations about the consultation document issued by the Warwickshire health authority about the hospital of St. Cross in Rugby; and if she will list them.

Dr. Mawhinney: The recorded number of correspondents is 176. The names have been placed in the Library.

Research and Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending on research and development in each of the last five years given in 1992-93 prices in her Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	64·2
1989-90	69·4
1990-91	78·5
1991-92	[1]60·8
1992-93	[2]59·3

[1] The reduction in expenditure between 1990-91 and 1991-92 can be attributed to the termination of the locally organised research scheme (LORS) in 1991. LORS was a programme of research commissioned locally but funded directly by DH. The research work of LORS has continued at a local level.

The reduction in expenditure, when adjusted to 1992-93 prices, between 1991-92 and 1992-93 can be principally attributed to a reduction in expenditure by the National Blood Authority—formerly the Central Blood Laboratories—from £6·2 million to £1·1 million.

[2] Estimate.

These figures do not include expenditure which supports research-related activities in special health authorities and national health service hospitals. The total of NHS research and research-related expenditure is estimated currently at £320 million. Further information is available in "Research for Health", copies of which are available in the Library.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press officers her Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

	Numbers
1989-90	13
1990-91	14
1991-92	13
1992-93	14

Midwives

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the conclusions of the second report of the Health Select Committee of Session 1991-92 on maternity services—HC 29—that midwives should be responsible for their own practice and education.

Mr. Sackville: The Government's response—Cm 2018—to the Select Committee report was published in July 1992. Paragraphs 2.12.2, 2.12.3 and 2.205 et seq set out our position on these issues. The Government's response to the Select Committee announced the establishment of an expert committee to review policy on care during child birth. That work was completed in August 1993 with the publication of "Changing Childbirth". Copies of both reports are available in the Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the qualifications of university chairs of midwifery; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the regional and area offices of her Department and of inspectorates and other public bodies for which she is responsible.

Mr. Sackville: Regional offices of the social services inspectorate are in London; Gateshead; Leeds; Birmingham; Bristol; Manchester and Nottingham.

There are six regional outposts of the national health service management executive and they are based in Manchester; Leeds; Brentwood, Essex; Craven Hill, London; Bristol and Chipping Norton, Oxfordshire.

Of the Department's non-departmental public bodies as listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies", copies of which are available in the Library, the following have regional and area offices: the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work has regional offices at Pentonville road, London; Bristol; Rugby and Leeds; the English National Board of Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has offices in London; Bristol; Sheffield; Chester and York; the Public Health Laboratory Services Board has 53 area laboratories, situated in: Ashford, Kent; Bangor; Bath; Birmingham; Brighton; Bristol; Cambridge; Cardiff; Carlisle; Carmarthen; Park Royal, London; Chelmsford; Chester; Coventry; Dorchester; Dulwich, London; Epsom; Gloucester; Guildford; Hereford; Hull; Ispwich; Leeds; Leicester; Lincoln; Liverpool; Luton; Manchester; Middlesbrough; Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Norwich; Nottingham; Oxford; Peterborough; Plymouth; Poole; Portsmouth; Preston; Reading; Rhyl; Salisbury; Sheffield; Shrewsbury; Southampton; Stoke-on-Trent; Swansea; Taunton; Tooting, London; Truro; Watford, Whipps Cross, London; Wolverhampton; the National Radiological Protection Board has centres in Glasgow and Leeds, apart from its main centre in Didcot in Oxfordshire; the mental health review tribunals have four regional offices in Nottingham; Liverpool; Stanmore, Middlesex and Surbiton, Surrey; and the Health Education Authority has other premises in Canterbury and Oxford, apart from its main London headquarters.

NHS Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the appointments that she has made to posts in the national health service in the last year where there has been no advertisement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Many candidates nominated for public national health service appointments are identified as a result of advertising. The numbers are not available centrally. It is not our poicy, nor would it be economical, to advertise posts individually.

Child Hospital Patients

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children admitted to hospital have been treated on adult wards in the last year; and what percentage this represents of total children patients.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what number and percentage of children receiving intensive care in the last year were treated in adult intensive care units.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. A survey carried out by the British Paediatric Association in connection with publication of the report "The Care of Critically Ill Children", copies of which are available in the Library, showed that, in 1991, a total of 12,822 children received intensive care, of whom 2,627—20·5 per cent.—children were treated in adult intensive care units. We are taking action to improve the availability of paediatric intensive care facilities, and we will be issuing guidance to health authorities early in the new year.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 478, what amounts of the fundholding allocation were retained by general practitioner fundholders in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional level information will not be available until all fundholder accounts have been audited and local arrangements for the voluntary return of savings have been completed.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of reimbursing general practitioner practices for preparations to become fundholders in each region in each year to date.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 478, how the figure retained by general practitioner fundholders was calculated.

Dr. Mawhinney: Latest information available indicates that the total of general practitioner fundholder underspending in 1992-93 was £31·9 million, though some unaudited information is included in this. GP fundholders have already voluntarily returned £2·4 million of this and further voluntary returns are expected to result in about £28 million efficiency savings to be retained by GP fundholders.

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each of the local authority secure places, and secure units in youth treatment centres, in England and Wales, indicating the number of places in each and the proposed locations of the planned 65 new secure places announced in 1991 together with tables showing the number of (a) old and (b) new places falling into each (i) county and (ii) region in England and Wales.

Mr. Bowis: There is a national network of 295 approved local authority secure places in England, to which all local authorities have access. Details of these, and the secure places in the two youth treatment centres, are shown in table A.

Because of a rise in the number of 15 to 16-year-old boys remanded to prison since 1991, a capital programme to increase the national stock of secure accommodation in England by a further 100 places is now planned. Details of proposals to provide these additional places currently brought forward by local authorities are shown in table B. Final confirmation of proposals is dependent, in some cases, on local authority agreement and on obtaining necessary planning consents.

Information about the provision of secure accommodation in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NHS Chief Executive

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will announce the name of the new NHS chief executive, and the salary for the post.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to do so shortly. The salary offered is £82,925 plus performance-related pay, but more may be available for a candidate with exceptional qualifications or experience.

Public Meetings

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirements are imposed on district health authorities, regional health authorities, and health service trusts, to hold meetings in public of the main governing body, any committees, and any sub-committees; and what rights of access the public have to agendas, minutes, and reports of such bodies, committees and sub-committees.

Dr. Mawhinney: The meetings of regional health authorities, district health authorities and family health services authorities are governed by the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960. This requires any full meeting of the authority, at which approval for a specific action is required, to be open to the public. But the public may be excluded from the whole or part of a meeting when confidential business is to be discussed. The provisions of the 1960 Act do not apply to committees or sub-committees of authorities, but committees comprising the full membership of the authority must meet in public unless a resolution to exclude the press and public is passed. The 1960 Act also requires authorities to supply the press, on request, with a copy of the agenda for each full meeting.

National health service trusts, and their committees or sub-committees, are not subject to the 1960 Act. Trusts are required to have one public meeting per year, in accordance with the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. Many NHS trusts have developed substantial programmes of public meetings and regular meetings with community health councils.

NHS trusts are required to publish annual reports, business plans and accounts. Regional health authorities, district health authorities and family health services authorities are not required to do so, but many publish annual reports, and their audited accounts are publicly available on request.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of correspondence received by (a) her Department and (b) each of her Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and all its agencies have targets for answering all correspondence within 28 days of receipt. All letters receiving a ministerial reply are acknowledged within five days of receipt. For the period 1 January 1993 to 30 November 1993, 71·5 per cent. of such letters received a reply within the target period. More detailed information on correspondence receiving a response from officials could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been done on the links between vehicle movements, exhaust emissions and asthma in Greater London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 October, at column 236.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the annual number of deaths which will result from radioactive discharges from the operation of THORP.

Mr. Sackville: No such estimates have been made. The National Radiological Protection Board—NRPB—has made an assessment of the collective radiation doses from discharges at Sellafield. The results of the NRPB work confirm that the discharges from the THORP plant will result in radiation doses much lower than natural background radiation levels. It has described the annual attributable risk to individuals in the world population as "vanishingly small".

"Keep Warm Keep Well"

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inquiries have been made to the "Keep Warm Keep Well" initiative so far during the current winter to date.

Mr. Bowis: Since the launch of the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign in mid-October 1993, the freephone telephone inquiry line has received 8,783 calls for advice or information, and 28,938 individuals and organisations have requested supplies of the "Keep Warm Keep Well" brochure, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

European Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has received about the success of the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations;

(2) what evaluation has been made of the impact of the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations;

(3) what plans she has to work with other Government Departments to take forward programmes and ideas arising from the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations.

Mr. Bowis: The year is widely regarded as having been successful, although no formal representations on the matter have yet been received. An evaluation exercise has recently commenced to identify the key achievements of the year and its implications for future work.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which programmes and events for the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations she has been directly involved.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been directly involved in a number of initiatives, including the launch of the year in the United Kingdom at the age resource awards in London last December, in the presence of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales; an interview on BBC Television's "Primetime" in January with Lady Sally Greengross, director of Age Concern, England; opening the European year exhibition in the House of Commons in February; contributing to the regular news bulletin produced for the year; providing the foreword for a publication produced by sixth form students from the Royal borough of Kingston upon Thames; speaking at a reception hosted by Age Concern, England in October; launching the "Aging Well" pilot programme in November.

Other Ministers have also been present at a number of events during the year and, on behalf of the Secretary of State, I thanked participants at a finale event at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on 15 December, following which I hosted the closing reception.

During the United Kingdom's presidency of the Council of Ministers, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State opened a major conference on health promotion and sickness prevention for older people. These issues have been taken forward during the course of the year, both at national and at European level.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total Government expenditure on promoting the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in the United Kingdom; and what was Government expenditure on previous European years.

Mr. Bowis: The Department of Health has funded the operation of a secretariat for the year, based at Age Concern, England headquarters, at a total cost for the period to 31 March 1994 of £330,000, including a contribution of £79,000 from the Department of Social Security. The Departments of Health and Social Security have also provided officers on secondment to the secretariat, at an approximate cost to March 1994 of £18,000.

It is estimated that the costs of publicity for the year provided through the Department of Health information division will be in the region of £130,000.

The Department of Health set up an advisory group for the year, at an approximate total cost of £8,000. The Department has two part-time officers working exclusively in connection with the year at an aggregate annual cost of £18,500. A substantial further, unquantifiable, level of staff input is also being provided by staff in the Departments of Health and Social Security and elsewhere in Government.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health launched the United Kingdom programme for the year on 17 December 1992 in the presence of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre. The Department of Health contributed approximately £14,000 to this event.

A number of other Government Departments have contributed to the promotion of the year by providing information and practical support for particular events. it is not possible to quantify the total costs.

Expenditure on previous European years is a matter for relevant Departments in each case.

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research or monitoring has been undertaken about the implementation of section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983, relating to aftercare for certain detained patients.

Mr. Bowis: The implementation of section 117 is monitored by the Mental Health Act Commission on its visits to hospitals and at meetings with health authorities and social services departments. In its fifth biennial report, published on 10 December, the commission notes that authorities are linking section 117 arrangements to the care programme approach. Copies of the report are available in the Library.

Section 117 requires health and local authorities to provide aftercare for patients who have been detained in hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983. The care programme approach, which we introduced in April 1991, requires that all patients about to be discharged after in-patient treatment for a mental illness, whether or not they have been detained, should be systematically assessed in respect of their health and social care needs, have an individual care programme and be allocated a named key worker. For those patients who have been detained under the Act, the requirements of section 117 will be met by proper implementation of the care programme approach.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the outcome of the comprehensive autumn round of monitoring by regional health authorities and the social services inspectorate of community care for the mentally ill.

Mr. Bowis: The monitoring suggested that authorities had made generally good progress in putting in place the basic structures and systems required. The national monitoring round did not look at services for specific client groups, but services for people with a mental illness under new arrangements are being examined as part of one of a range of special studies currently being carried out by the social services inspectorate and national health service management executive in a sample of authorities.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she proposes to take to respond to the criticisms of psychiatric services made in the recently published report of the Mental Health Act Commission; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be making a full response to the commission's report. This will be laid before Parliament.

Ashbourne Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the pricing charges to the NHS for drugs of Ashbourne Pharmaceuticals.

Mr. Sackville: The Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee and others have made representations. We are currently carrying out an inquiry into the discounts received by dispensing doctors from their suppliers. It is hoped that the report will be available by the spring of 1994.

Nursing Staff

Kilgarth Tip

Mr. Tom Clarke: to ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 411, if he will publish the correspondence relating to his decision about the application by City of Glasgow district council in respect of Kilgarth tip, Coatbridge.

Mr. Lang: I do not intend to publish the correspondence relating to my decision in the Kilgarth case. It is our normal practice to treat such papers as private matters involving only the parties directly concerned. After decision letters are issued it is for each party to decide whether, or to what extent, it wishes to disclose details of the case.

Cows and Ewes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what according to (a) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data he has available and (b) the farm business survey, was the average number of (i) beef cows and (ii) ewes, carried on less-favoured areas livestock farms, by county and in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: The table provides information by region—county information is not readily available—on the average number of beef cows and ewes on cattle and sheep farms wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas —LFAs—in Scotland from the agricultural census as at June 1992. As the farm accounts scheme covers only farms that are considered to be full-time commercial businesses, very small farms are excluded from the survey. The farm accounts scheme records the average number of livestock on the holding throughout the year. On LFA livestock farms, the average number of beef cows and ewes recorded by the farm accounts scheme in 1992-93 was 48 and 372 respectively. This compares with averages as at June of 46 and 364 respectively for similar farms from the agricultural census at June 1992.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been sold and from which forest parks since 1981 as part of the programme to dispose of Forestry Commission land.

Sir Hector Monro: Since 1 April 1989, the Forestry Commission has sold the following areas in national forest parks:

Year	Forest park	Woodland	Area (hectares)
1990	Thetford	12 Acre Wood (part)	0·1
1990	Border	Stonehaugh	0·9
1992	Border	Sleetbeck	0·6

Sales of Forestry Commission land in national forest parks were not recorded separately before 1 April 1989 and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the forest parks which he has no plans to privatise.

Sir Hector Monro: Ministers will await the advice of the forestry review group before considering what action, if any, should be taken in respect of the ownership and management of Forestry Commission woodlands.

Farm Holdings

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average size of farm holding in the less-favoured areas as sampled by (a) the most recent farm business survey and (b) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data he has available, by country and in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: The table provides information by region—county information is not readily available—on the average size, in hectares, of cattle and sheep farms wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas—LFAs—in Scotland from the agricultural census at June 1992. As the farm accounts scheme covers only farms that are considered to be full-time commercial businesses, very small farms are excluded from the survey. The average size of livestock farms wholly or mainly in the LFA as recorded in the farm accounts scheme sample for 1992-93 is 439 hectares, compared with 393 hectares for the average of similar farms in the agricultural census at June 1992.

Scottish Transport Group

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the board members of the Scottish Transport Group as at 7 September.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Transport Group board members at 7 September 1993 were:

Ian S. Irwin CBE (Chairman)
Ronald S. McNeill CBE
Robert S. Temple
John Stark
Archibald Douglas

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland from what source of funds the payments to former Scottish Transport Group managers, as described in a letter from Mr. A. Douglas, board member, of 7 September, are to be met.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The payments have been met from the Scottish Transport Group's cash balances.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he took on whether there was a legal obligation to offer payments in lieu of BUPA membership to former Scottish Transport Group managers; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This was a matter for the Scottish Transport Group. Legal advice obtained by the STG board was that contractual obligations existed in relation to BUPA membership.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many former members of Scottish Transport Group management have been sent letters from Mr. A. Douglas, board member, dated 7 September concerning payments in lieu of BUPA membership; and how many have responded so far.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that the Scottish Transport Group sent letters to 27 individuals and that all responded.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the offer of payments in lieu of BUPA membership made in a letter of 7 September by Mr. A. Douglas was available to board members of the Scottish Transport Group.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The offer of payments in lieu of BUPA membership was available to executive board members of the Scottish Transport Group.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current value of assets owned by the Scottish Transport Group.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The value is £8·7 million.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications were received following the intimation for two judicial vacancies on the Shrieval bench in the "Scots Law Times;" and how many applicants were female.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Applications specifically resulting from the intimation in the "Scots Law Times" numbered 11, of which four were from female candidates.

Laurence Peterken

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will provide substantive answers to the outstanding questions from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill of 2 December relating to Mr. Laurence Peterken.

Mr. Stewart: I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

Agriculture Census

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the variation of the acreage listed under the heading of roads, yards and buildings in the June censuses for the years 1982 to 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The area of roads, yards and buildings is included in the category "other land" in the agricultural census. The figures in hectares for this category of land on main holdings are as follows:

	Hectares
1982	45,212
1983	45,108
1984	35,795
1985	37,025
1986	38,358
1987	38,193
1988	40,035
1989	44,314
1990	52,239
1991	47,470
1992	46,002

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total land area in Scotland as shown in the June census figures (a) in 1986 and (b) in 1987; and what was the reason for the difference.

Sir Hector Monro: The total agricultural area on main holdings in 1986 and 1987, including common grazings, was 5,967,552 hectares and 5,954,416 hectares respectively. These figures are consistent with the main holdings definition introduced in 1991. Explanations for differences in areas from year to year are not collected in census returns. However, the bulk of the change in total agricultural area reflects a change in the area of rough grazings.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the areas of Forestry Commission woods in the Clydebank and Milngavie constituency.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The only Forestry Commission woodland in the hon. Member's constituency is part of Auchineden wood.

Harbours

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amounts of public funds spent on each harbour during the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Files

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many files marked "Not for National Audit Office eyes" are held by the Department; and how many are marked "Not for Public Accounts Committee eyes".

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 December 1993]: There is a total of 263 subject files in my Department which carry the marking "Not for NAO Eyes".

The marking "Not for NAO eyes" is used in accordance with guidance from the Treasury and agreed by the National Audit Office under which documents relating to the handling of relations between Departments and the NAO are not automatically available to NAO while they are current.

The marking is removed once the subject matter is no longer current. The Scottish Office audit unit checks from time to time to ensure that the marking is being used and removed correctly.

There are no files marked "Not for PAC eyes".

New Towns

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff are expected to be employed in each of the new town corporations at the time of their winding up; how many will have been transferred before the winding up of each of the new towns; how many of the transferred staff will be covered by the Transfer of Undertaking (Protection of Employment) Regulation 1981 and the European Community acquired rights directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 December 1993]: It is not possible to predict how many staff will be employed at final wind-up. Staff will retire or be transferred to other bodies or be made redundant at different times during the wind-up period, depending on the completion of projects, the outcome of negotiations with the bodies to receive transferees and the demands of the complex process of winding up. Whether the TUPE regulations apply to a group of staff is a matter for decision in each case, in the light of legal advice, by the body which takes over the associated function. Therefore it is not possible to predict how many staff will transfer by virtue of TUPE. Current staff members for each development corporation were given in my answer to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram), on 6 December 1993, Official Report, column 84.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the area, in hectares, of new entrants to the five-year set-aside scheme for Scotland in the year beginning September 1991, the number of hectares which came out of the scheme in the year ending September 1991 and the number of hectares that have joined the scheme since September 1992.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The areas, as reported, in respect of the five-year set-aside scheme in Scotland are as follows:

(a) New entrants in the year from 1 October 1991: 3,765 hectares.

(b) Withdrawals in the year ending 30 September 1991: 1,720 hectares.

(c) Land entered into the scheme from 1 October 1992: 400 hectares.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what is (a) the 1993-94 estimated outturn and (b) the 1994-95 planned provision of local authority net capital expenditure in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The information is (a) £878 million and (b) £918 million respectively, resulting in an increase of over £39 million or 4·5 per cent.

The figures for both years are inclusive of capital grants. They exclude expenditure carried forward from previous years under the end-year flexibility arrangements. The also exclude capital expenditure funded from revenue and from the European regional development fund. The planned provision for 1994-95 is provisional since detailed expenditure allocations are subject to revision until final plans are published in the departmental report "Serving Scotland's Needs".

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The following table shows the amount of central Government funding received by each body in the years 1990-91 to 1993-94.

The figures for 1993-94 are expected outturn.

The expenditure allocations for future years are not decided more than one year ahead and those for 1994-95 are not yet available in all cases.

Further information will be published in the departmental report "Serving Scotland's Needs."

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many firms were invited to tender for the public relations contract at Greater Glasgow health board; and what is the minimum number of firms that are required to be invited to ensure competitive tendering.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 25 November 1993]: I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 14 December 1993 by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minster, Official Report, column 561.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the name and job description of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department, showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. David Hunt: My special adviser is Mr. Michael McManus. His job is to advise Ministers on policy matters.

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what plans he has to extend the period when employers would not be expected to contribute towards the purchase of equipment or services under the access to work scheme;

(2) when the initial six-month period when employers will not be required to contribute towards the purchase of specialist equipment or services for disabled employees will commence;

(3) when he expects to make an announcement on (a) the level of the ceiling for employer contributions and (b) the level of ceiling on allocations for individual employees within the new access to work scheme;

(4) if he will outline the procedures for making needs assessments under the new access to work scheme;

(5) if he will outline the impact of the introduction of employer contributions towards the purchase of specialist equipment and services for disabled employees upon (a) self-employed disabled people, (b) part-time disabled employees, (c) disabled employees working from home, (d) disabled employees on temporary contracts of one year or less and (e) disabled people contracted to work concurrently for two or more separate employers;

(6) if he will make a statement on what transitional arrangements will be put in place for those disabled employees currently in receipt of equipment and services under special schemes, following the commencement of the access to work scheme;

(7) if he will make it his policy to establish a mechanism enabling disabled employees to lodge appeals against capping limits set under the new access to work scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made a statement about access to work to the House on 22 June 1993, Official Report, column 102. Access to work will replace and extend four of the Department's current special schemes and enable us to help more disabled people and meet a much wider range of their employment related needs. Clients' needs will be assessed by the Employment Service's placing, assessment and counselling teams in consultation with clients and their employers and buying in expert advice where necessary.

There have been a number of issues on access to work on which my right hon. Friend has still to make decisions. We are currently listening to the views of a number of interested parties and individuals. My right hon. Friend will make decisions on these areas and make an announcement as soon as possible.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made by his Department of the impact of the introduction of an employers' contribution and individual employee caps under access to work upon those employees requiring new equipment or services as a result of internal promotions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The possibility of an employee needing new help on promotion is one which we are taking into account in setting ceilings, both for individuals' entitlement and employer contribution.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps he is taking to prevent employers from attempting to recover the costs of employer contributions for disabled employees under access to work through reducing salaries and pay rises of the particular employees;

(2) if he will indicate what provisions are in place to assist a disabled person to keep his or her job in the event of an employer refusing to make a financial contribution towards equipment and services under the new access to work scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Placing assessment and counselling teams will work closely with employers who have employees being helped under access to work to ensure that they are fully aware of the benefits of retaining those employees. The PACTs will help the employer identify cost-effective help to ensure that any necessary contribution is minimised. In addition, the maximum contribution will be capped at a modest level. We believe that employers will be willing to pay a reasonable contribution to retain the services of valued existing employees, but employers who do deduct pay in these circumstances may face claims under the Wages Act 1986.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the disability organisations he has met to date to discuss the requirement upon employers to pay a contribution towards the purchase of special equipment and services for disabled employees as set out in the access to work proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has met representatives of the Royal National Institute for the Blind, MENCAP, the Spinal Injuries Association, the Royal National Institute of Deaf People, RADAR, Deaf Accord and the Employers' Forum on Disability, to discuss the new scheme, access to work, about which he made a statement to the House on 22 June 1993, Official Report, columns 102-03. My noble Friend Lord Henley has also met representatives from the National Federation for the Blind in the United Kingdom and from the Homeworkers Action Group for Blind and Partially Sighted People.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the average amount of time spent in assessing the needs of disabled employees under each of the current special schemes for employment for each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what costs have so far been incurred by the Health and Safety Executive in the course of its pay and grading review, including both the costs of external consultants and in-house staff.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Up to 14 December 1993 the Health and Safety Executive had incurred costs of £178,010·72 in connection with its pay and grading review. This figure includes purchase of software, consultants' fees, and associated travel and subsistence expenses. The cost in terms of in-house staff is not available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. Staff throughout the organisation are involved in aspects of this initiative.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors were employed in the Health and Safety Executive on 1 June; and what proportion of these were in the class II grade.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 1 June 1993 the Health and Safety Executive employed 722·5 factory inspectors. Of these 29 per cent. were in the class II grade.

Figures given are full-time equivalent counts; part-timers are counted as half units.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people occupied posts in the Health and Safety Executive at grade 4 level and above on 1 April 1990 and on 1 December 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 1 April 1990 the number of posts occupied by the Health and Safety Executive at grade 4 level and above was 12; on 1 December 1993 it was 14.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what imbalances in grade mix had been identified by the Health and Safety Executive in the period up to April 1990; and what action the Health and Safety Executive had taken to reduce these imbalances.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No imbalances in grade mix were identified by the Health and Safety Executive in the period up to April 1990, or have been since.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff in the Health and Safety Executive, and in what grades, have been identified as surplus.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive has not identified any as being surplus.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what customer satisfaction surveys have been conducted by the Health and Safety Executive; and what were the results of these surveys in terms of percentage of respondents who identified the service they received from the Health and Safety Executive as good or excellent.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive carried out customer satisfaction surveys in 1992, and 1993 as part of its commitment to the citizens charter. Results for 1993 show that 85 per cent. of people were satisfied with the way HSE responded to inquiries, and 95 per cent. described the service obtained as good or excellent.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what grant in aid was paid to the Health and Safety Executive in 1991-92, 1992-93, and 1993-94 to date; and what sums are due to be paid in 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1997-98.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive received £157·7 million grant in aid in 1991-92 and £171·3 million in 1992-93. For 1993-94, up to 30 November 1993, HSE had received £118·2 million. Information about provision for HSE in future years, will be published in the departmental report.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recruitment of staff is planned by the Health and Safety Executive before 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive is considering plans to announce recruitment competitions for certain groups of specialist inspectors such as railways inspectors. The timing of any such recruitments has not been decided.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of accidents reported at work are investigated by the Health and Safety Executive; and what are the criteria for deciding which accidents to investigate.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional figures for the financial year 1992-93 show that 6·4 per cent. of the total number of workplace injuries reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 and associated legislation were investigated.

All fatalities are investigated and the proportion of other injuries investigated varies according to the severity of the injury incurred, the magnitude of the hazard and the potential risk to workers or the public. Other criteria taken into account include the likelihood that a serious breach of the law has occurred, whether the accident appears to be one of a series of recurring events and whether investigation will provide better information about a new process.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff in the Health and Safety Executive were approached to take early retirement in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1993-94 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of staff who took early retirement from the Health and Safety Executive in the relevant years are as follows:

	Numbers
1990-91	33
1991-92	27
1993 to date[1]	45

[1] 15 December 1993.

The reasons for early retirement are varied, including medical and compassionate grounds. Records do not distinguish between self-nomination and invitation. None of the posts from which these staff retired had been identified as surplus.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many agricultural inspectors were employed in the Health and Safety Executive on 1 June; and what proportion of these were assistant agricultural inspectors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 1 June 1993 the Health and Safety Executive employed 185 agricultural inspectors. Of these 29 per cent. were assistant agricultural inspectors.

Figures given are full-time equivalent counts, part-timers are counted as half units.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what impact the surpluses of staff in the employment group as a whole will have upon the staffing levels and grade mix in the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive has offered, and will continue to offer, vacancies which arise to suitable surplus staff from the Employment Group. This has had no impact on staffing levels or grade mix within the executive, nor is any foreseen in the future.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the Health and Safety Executive's staff were employed on 1 December on deregulation initiatives from either himself or the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 1 December, the Health and Safety Executive had a deregulation unit with three staff. It also had four staff working on the Health and Safety Commission's review of regulation. However, staff throughout the organisation are involved in aspects of this initiative.

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the composition and accountability of the members of the Health and Safety Commission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission is currently composed of a chairman and nine members. The members are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in accordance with section 10(2) of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

The accountability of the commission to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, and via him to Parliament, laid out in paragraphs 14 and 15 of schedule 2 to the HSWA.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future role of the Health and Safety Commission in the introduction of, and repeal of, health and safety legislation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, Ministers have the power to make health and safety regulations for the general purposes of the Act. These are, in essence, to secure the health, safety and welfare of people at work and of others affected by work activities. Such regulations must be made either on the basis of proposals submitted by the Health and Safety Commission, or after consultation with the commission.

This procedure applies both to the introduction of new health and safety legislation and to regulations which repeal or modify existing legislation.

Focus Project

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current cost to the Health and Safety Executive of the FOCUS project; when the system will be introduced; and whether it has fulfilled all the objectives set for it.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of the FOCUS project was £4·42 million at 30 November 1993, the latest date for which information is readily available.

The Health and Safety Executive plans to introduce the system in stages, commencing in April 1994.

Objectives relating to the increased efficiency of text production have been met. Objectives which relate to the use of improved intelligence cannot be met until the system is fully operational and contains significant amounts of data.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by parliamentary constituency in London the number of manufacturing jobs lost since April 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available. The latest employment information for parliamentary constituencies is for 1989 and 1991, from the periodic censuses of employment. This can be used to estimate the net change in the number of employees in employment. Information from these censuses, for manufacturing industry and by parliamentary constituency, can be obtained from the NOMIS database available in the Library.

Education and Training

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for maintaining the national targets for national education and training until the target date of 1996.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government endorse the national targets and have established the National Advisory Council for Education and Training Targets to monitor progress towards them and to give advice on policies affecting that progress. Towards the end of 1994, the council plans to begin consulting on a review of the targets.

Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what decisions were made at the Brussels summit of 10 and 11 December affecting the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The European Commission, in its report to the Council, stated its intention to bring forward a proposal to amend the acquired rights directive —77/187/EEC—in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity. The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 give effect to the directive in the United Kingdom.

The European Council asked the Commission to submit formal proposals in this and other subject areas at an early date, for adoption as quickly as possible.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the regional and area offices of his Department, and of inspectorates, agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The regional and area offices of the Department are given in the following table:

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Miss Widdecombe: For correspondence received from members of the public, the information is not available in the form requested. Such correspondence is dealt with by officials who are required to clear all letters within 10 working days. However, no central records are kept of the proportion that are cleared within this target.

For correspondence received from Members of Parliament from 1 January 1993 to date, 85 per cent. received a substantive reply within 15 working days. The Department does not routinely send acknowledgements. However, where it is not possible to reply within 15 days, an interim letter is sent explaining the reason for the delay.

The chief executive of the Employment Service provided hon. Members with substantive replies to 97 per cent. of letters received in the same period. The Employment Service acknowledges all letters received from hon. Members within five working days.

Public Meetings

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what requirements are imposed on training and enterprise councils to hold meetings in public of the main governing body, any committees and any sub-committees; and what rights of access the public have to agendas, minutes, and reports of such bodies, committees and sub-committees.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils are accountable to their local communities in a number of ways. Their contract requires that they hold a public meeting at least annually, make publicly available their corporate plan and publish an annual report and audited statement of accounts.

However, TECs are private companies and access to their meetings and to matters relating to these meetings is entirely for them to decide.

North Norfolk Action

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the extra cost of North Norfolk Action over and above the benefits previously paid to participants and the overall saving from those who have left the unemployment register due to moving directly from North Norfolk Action to regular employment or from ceasing to claim benefit after interview for North Norfolk Action participation; and what was the overall saving made in the first six months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Sir Ralph Howell, dated 17 December 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the extra cost of North Norfolk Action and the overall saving from those who have left the unemployment register due to moving from North Norfolk Action to employment or ceasing to claim benefit.

The extra cost of North Norfolk Action in addition to the cost of the benefit previously paid to participants up to 30 November 1993 is £167,300. The breakdown of how the expenditure was made up is as follows:

(a) Provider Fees	111,101

As I have previously explained, it is not possible to estimate the benefit savings made as a result of North Norfolk Action. This is because only through a proper evaluation exercise is it possible to take into account the effect of such factors as "deadweight" and "substitution". Evaluation results will be available later next year.

I hope this is helpful.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which organisations have tended to manage job clubs in Scotland and the north-east of England under his market-testing initiative; which have been shortlisted; and when a decision will be made to award contracts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 17 December 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about which organisations have tended to manage Jobclubs in Scotland and the North East of England under his market-testing initiative; which have been shortlisted; and when a decision will be made to award contracts.

A total of 168 organisations expressed an interest in bidding to run Employment Service (ES) Jobclub Services in Scotland and 102 in the ES Northern region, under the Employment Service's market testing programme. A list of these organisations is attached. In addition, a further 48 organisations expressed an interest in bidding in two or more ES Regions. A list of those organisations is also attached. These may or may not have bid for Jobclub Services in Scotland and ES Northern Region; this information is not available without considerable research which would be at disproportionate cost.

There was no shortlisting undertaken for the Jobclubs market test and therefore all organisations on the attached list were bidders and were evaluated against strict criteria involving performance assessment, commercial assessment and risk assessment.

The decision on award of contracts for this market test is currently being discussed, and results will be announced early in the New Year.

I hope this is helpful.

Health and Safety Legislation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to consulting (a) the insurance industry and (b) the Employment Medical Advisory Service on the Health and Safety Commission review of health and safety legislation; and what were his reasons in each case for his decision on whether they should be consulted.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does not expect to receive the Health and Safety Commission's final report on its review of health and safety regulations until April 1994. He will then consult widely and welcome any representations.

Tree Removal, Wanstead

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which health and safety regulations applied in the continued use of heavy machinery with protesters still chained to it, trying to prevent the felling of the chestnut tree at George Green, Wanstead.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 December 1993]: Health and safety legislation is not generally intended to afford protection to protesters who seek to disrupt work activity through civil disorder.

I understand that the police attended the incident referred to and that they have a duty in common law to preserve the peace.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Parry: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made as to the effectiveness of co-operation between the Crown Prosecution Service and the Merseyside police; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There is excellent co-operation between the Crown Prosecution Service and the Merseyside police. However, if the hon. Member is concerned about any particular cases, he is welcome to bring them to my attention.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases forwarded by the police to the Crown Prosecution Service were not proceeded with during each of the last seven years.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to him on 13 December 1993, Official Report, columns 454-55.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases the Crown Prosecution Service has dropped because the defendant could not be traced for each of the last seven years; and what has been the gravity of the crimes with which the defendants were charged.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service does not drop cases because the defendant cannot be traced. But such cases cannot proceed since the defendant's whereabouts are unknown, summonses and adjournment notices cannot be served, and bench warrants cannot be executed. Where the defendant is eventually found, proceedings will normally be reinstated. The number of cases falling into this category has only been recorded centrally since April 1991. The numbers are:

	Defendant not traced	Bench warrant not executed
1991 (April—December)	16,422	24,966
1992	22,145	43,246
1993 (January—September)	17,468	49,400

No information is held centrally about the nature of the offences in these cases.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases have been adjourned sine die at the request of the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last seven years; and what were the reasons for the requests.

The Attorney-General: The number of cases adjourned sine die has been recorded centrally only since April 1991. The figures are:

	Number
1991 (April to December)	13,148
1992	21,830
1993 (January to September)	14,594

No information is held centrally about the reasons for requesting that cases are adjourned sine die, but the most common reason is likely to be because the defendant is being proceeded against for other more serious charges in another court.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General what has been the cost in real terms of the Crown Prosecution Service for each of the last seven years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: The cost of the Crown Prosecution Service as measured by gross expenditure, converted to real terms using the GDP deflator figures published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", was:

	£000
[1]1986-87	106,363
1987-88	182,264
1988-89	200,202
1989-90	219,710
1990-91	235,658
1991-92	251,993
1992-93	273,748

[1] Part year.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General how many claims have been brought against the Crown Prosecution Service for costs, following cases in which the defendant was acquitted; and what were the costs of the claims.

The Attorney-General: Full records of the number of awards of costs made against the Crown Prosecution Service have been recorded centrally only since April 1991. The number of such awards and expenditure by the service on awards of costs during each of the last two financial years is:

	Number of Awards	Expenditure on Cost Awards £
1991-92	721	229,915·20
1992-93	682	477,788·39

The information held centrally does not reveal the number of occasions on which a claim for costs was rejected by the court, nor whether an award for costs was made after the defendant had been acquitted or convicted.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were dropped by the Crown Prosecution Service because the defendant had died in each of the last seven years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: The number of cases in which the Crown Prosecution Service has been unable to proceed because the defendant has died has only been recorded since April 1991. The available figures are:

	Number
1991 (April-December)	654
1992	758
1993 (January-September)	533

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General how many part-time staff have been employed by the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last seven years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: Comprehensive figures on the numbers of part-time staff employed by the Crown Prosecution Service are available for each of the past three years only.

In August 1991 the Department employed 333 part-time staff, or approximately 5·9 per cent. of total staff in post. By April 1992, this figure has increased to 410—6·5 per cent.—and by 30 June 1993 the total had reached 480—7·3 per cent. The total, as at 16 December 1993, stands at 521, or approximately 7·9 per cent. of staff in post.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

The Attorney-General: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. George Staple

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what plans he has to replace Mr. George Staple as head of the Serious Fraud Office;

(2) when Mr. George Staple's term of office expires.

The Attorney-General: (1) None. (2) Mr. Staple's present term of office expires on 20 April 1997.

Roger Levitt

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what opportunity was given by Mr. Justice Laws to Crown counsel to justify his acceptance of the plea on the basis of only the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association charge in the Levitt case; and what response was made.

The Attorney-General: The judge questioned whether the Crown's decision to accept the plea required his approval and was satisfied by prosecuting counsel, on the authorities, that it did not.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what considerations underlay the decision by the Serious Fraud Office not to pursue the charges relating to Mr. Frederick Forsyth in the Levitt case.

The Attorney-General: The plea tendered by Mr. Levitt encompassed his use of forged documents presented to FIMBRA, including documents purporting to show monies obtained from Mr. Forsyth and his agents as genuine income of TLG Ltd.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration Crown counsel in the Levitt case gave to appealing against the judge's ruling of 19 May on the limits in law of the offence of fraudulent trading.

The Attorney-General: Having considered all the curcumstances, prosecuting counsel advised against an appeal.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment was made by the Serious Fraud Office of whether the plea on the basis of misleading the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association only offered by Mr. Roger Levitt and accepted by the Crown adequately reflected the criminality of his case.

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office took the view that the plea tendered by Roger Levitt reflected the criminality of his conduct and conferred sufficient sentencing power on the trial judge.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what account the Serious Fraud Office took of the result of the Terry Ramsden case before accepting Roger Levitt's guilty plea.

The Attorney-General: The result of the Terry Ramsden case was not regarded as relevant to the decision whether to accept the plea.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what options on pleas to the charges were offered to Mr. Roger Levitt prior to the Crown opening speech.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to my earlier answer today. However, I have been assured by prosecuting counsel that, although potential pleas may have been discussed on a counsel-to-counsel basis, no offers were made by the Crown to Mr. Levitt. Mr. Levitt's plea was accepted on 22 November. Counsel have also told me that they would not regard any approach by them to the defence as constituting an offer unless they had firm instructions to accept an affirmative response.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what possible pleas each of the Crown counsel, suggested or discussed with counsel for Roger Levitt before 22 November.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to my earlier answers today.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what consultations Mr. David Cocks, QC, had with any person in his Department before writing his article of 7 December in The Times in relation to the Levitt case; and what guidance was given on the line such an article should take.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what Crown Counsel were told by Mr. Levitt's counsel about their intentions to cite precedents in seeking a non-custodial sentence before accepting his guilty plea to only the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Association charge.

The Attorney-General: I am informed by counsel that they were not informed of any such intention.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General for what reasons Crown counsel, Mr. Fisher, asked the judge through his clerk on 9 November not to sit the following day in the Levitt case.

The Attorney-General: I am informed that Mr. Fisher made no such request. He acquiesced in a request made by leading counsel for Mr. Levitt.

Reed, Price and McNamara

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General on what occasion prior to the Crown opening speech, counsel offered to counsel for any of the co-defendants Reed, Price or McNamara an arrangement as regards pleas falling short of the full offence of fraudulent trading as both particularised in court 1; and if he will give details.

The Attorney-General: It would not be appropriate for me to answer questions about counsel-to-counsel discussions of such a nature.

Crown Counsel

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what restrictions are imposed on QCs engaged as Crown counsel on writing newspaper articles on the cases in which they have been engaged.

The Attorney-General: Such issues are governed by the code of conduct for the Bar of England and Wales. Counsel appearing for the Crown are not subject to any special restrictions.

Bail

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish the criteria used by the Crown Prosecution Service when deciding whether to object to bail.

The Attorney-General: If a Crown prosecutor decides to object to bail he will need to satisfy the court that grounds exist under the Bail Act 1976 for a remand in custody. The criteria which he will apply, in deciding whether to object to bail, therefore mirror those set out in the Act which the court will consider in hearing an application for bail.

Incitement to Racial Hatred

Mr. Shore: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases of incitement to racial hatred under the Public Order Act 1986 were referred to him by the Crown Prosecution Service in each year since 1987; how many were not proceeded with (a) through insufficient evidence, (b) because prosecution was judged not to be in the public interest and (c) for other reasons.

The Solicitor-General [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1993, c. 748]: In each of the years since 1987, the Crown Prosecution Service has referred cases to the Attorney-General asking for consent to prosecute offences contrary to part III of the Public Order Act 1986 in respect of the following numbers of persons:

	Numbers
1987	0
1988	3
1989	1
1990	2
1991	8
1992	3
1993	1

Consent to prosecute was withheld twice on evidential grounds and twice on public interest grounds. Proceedings were commenced by the CPS against 13 defendants, and in the final case although consent was originally granted it was later withdrawn on public interest grounds.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fisheries

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list each of the last three years and the current year the number of (a) salmon, (b) grilse and (c) sea trout taken by commercial fishing engines in (i) estuaries, (ii) coastal netting stations and (iii) drift nets; and if he will indicate the numbers of such nets and number of licences issued in those years, the number of persons employed in Northern Ireland in such activity indicating the number of full-time and part-time fishermen and the value and number of fish taken from the Foyle Fisheries Commission—FFC—area and the fisheries conservation area.

Mr. Ancram: (i) Commercial salmon catch returns do not differentiate between salmon and grilse and the statistics sought are not available in the form requested. The only information available in the FFC area relates to catch statistics by class of commercial fishing engine and is contained in the commission's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library. The only information available in the Fisheries Conservancy Board area is shown in the table. Information relating to 1993 is not currently available.

		Method
Year	Total salmon caught	Coastal netting stations	Drift nets	Others
1990	10,214	7,580	252	2,382
1991	7,513	5,058	838	1,617
1992	10,049	7,414	2,267	368

(ii) The number of nets in use is equivalent to the number of licences issued. This information is available in the annual reports of the Foyle Fisheries Commission and the Fisheries Conservancy Board, copies of which are in the Library. The number and type of licences issued in 1993 are shown in the table:

	Number
FFC
Drift sea	20
Drift lough and sea	80
Drift lough	12
Draft A-R Foyle	62
R Roe	1
Fixed engine	1
Total	176
FCB
Bag nets	14
Fixed	6
Drift	9
Draft	4
Salmon	4
Total	37

(iii) Accurate figures of full-time and part-time fishermen are not available. It is estimated that there are 83 part-time fishermen in the Fisheries Conservancy Board area and 400 part-time fishermen in the Foyle Fisheries Commission area. There are no fishermen engaged in salmon fishing on a full-time basis.

(iv) The number and estimate value of salmon and grilse taken are shown in the table. There are no figures available for sea trout.

	FFC[1]		FCB
	Number	Estimated value £	Number	Estimated value £
1990	22,210	309,100	10,214	132,638
1991	12,908	191,901	7,513	104,738
1992	21,129	292,312	10,049	146,579

[1] These figures represent half the total catch of salmon in the Foyle Area which for statistical purposes in equally divided between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Mr William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of the last three years and the current year the number of (a) salmon, (b) grilse and (c) sea trout taken in each river by anglers in Northern Ireland; and what are the totals for the Foyle

Fisheries Commission areas in (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) the Irish Republic and (iii) in the area covered by the Fisheries Conservancy Board.

Mr. Ancram: Separate records for salmon and grilse are not available. The total catch by anglers is not known. The only rod catch statistics available are contained in the annual reports of the Foyle Fisheries Commission and Fisheries Conservancy Board, copies of which are available in the Library. No figures are currently available for 1993.

Roads

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums he intends to spend on new roads in Northern Ireland in the next financial year; how much of this is available for the construction of new bypasses; and which bypass projects he intends to go to contract in that year.

Mr. Atkins: It is currently estimated that approximately £22 million, including £9·2 million on the cross harbour road link, will be spent on new roads in the 1994-95 financial year. Of this, approximately £4·1 million will be spent on new bypasses. Precise estimates will depend on the final determination of the 1993 public expenditure round. During 1994-95, it is intended to go to contract for Newry bypass, stage 3, roadworks.

A21

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland with which organisations he consulted before his decision to downgrade from A21 to unclassified that section of roadway in Francis street, Newtownards from Castle place to its junction with Zion place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the volume of traffic in Newtownards at (a) route A21 from Georges street to New road and (b) the unclassified roadway at Francis street from Castle place to its junction with Zion place.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is as follows:

(a) approximately 15,700 vehicles per day;
(b) approximately 13,900 vehicles per day.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Sir John Wheeler: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Glass-fronted Fires

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to ensure that a comprehensive investigation into the safety performance of glass-fronted fires in public sector houses is carried out.

Mr. Atkins: There are no grounds that I am aware of at present for such an investigation.

I am assured by the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that all new appliances are tested to an approved standard and existing appliances are inspected and maintained in a planned maintenance cycle.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations have been carried out to investigate the safety of glass-fronted fires in public housing stock.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that, while there have been no specific investigations, the Housing Executive is satisfied with current measures in place to ensure the safe operation of these appliances.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fires have occurred in each of the past five years in public sector houses; and in how many cases the causes were related to glass-fronted fires.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that while no records are held centrally of the number of fires in public sector houses, it is not aware of any where the causes were specifically related to glass-fronted room heaters.

House Fires

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been killed or injured as a result of house fires in Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chief executive that detailed information of this nature is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ward and Bed Closures

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the wards which have been closed in each hospital in the Southern health and social services board area in each of the past five years;

(2) how many hospital beds have been closed in each hospital in the Southern health and social services board areas in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: Information about the wards closed in individual hospitals and the number of hospital beds that have been closed is not collected centrally. The table shows the average number of available beds in each hospital within the Southern health and social services board area in each of the last five years.

Nurses

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time or part-time nurses have been laid off by the Southern health and social services board in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Numbers
1989	8
1990	2
1991	1
1992	6
1993	11

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses employed on a temporary basis by the Southern health and social services board have not had their contracts renewed, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Numbers
1989	74
1990	81
1991	68
1992	57
1993	114

Farm Holdings

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average size of farm holding in the less-favoured areas as sampled by (a) the most recent farm business survey and (b) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data he has available, by county and in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The farm business survey does not contain very small farms and data are not available at county level. The only farm type identified by their less-favoured area status are those on which cattle and sheep are the dominant enterprises. The average size of farm in these categories in the 1992-93 survey was 93 hectares.

In the June 1993 agricultural census in Northern Ireland, the average sizes of all active holdings in the less-favoured areas were:

County	All farms in the LFA Average size (ha)	All cattle and sheep LFA farms Average size (ha)
Antrim	43·8	45·7
Armagh	22·2	20·2
Down	27·8	25·3
Fermanagh	34·9	34·5
Londonderry	42·9	44·5
Tyrone	36·0	35·4
Northern Ireland	35·2	35·0

For farms similar to those covered in the farm business survey, the average size was 63 hectares.

Cows and Ewes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what according to (a) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data he has available and (b) the farm business survey, was the average number of (1) beef cows and (2) ewes, carried on less-favoured areas livestock farms, by county and in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The farm business survey does not cover very small farms and data from it are not available at county level. The only farm type identified by its less-favoured area status is that on which cattle and sheep are the dominant enterprises. For farms in these categories in the 1992-93 survey the average number of beef cows was 34 and the average number of ewes was 155.

In the June 1993 agricultural census in Northern Ireland, the average number of beef cows and ewes on all cattle and sheep LFA holdings in the less-favoured areas were:

All cattle and sheep LFA farms

County	Average number per farm Beef cows	Ewes
Antrim	17	102
Armagh	11	21
Down	10	67
Fermanagh	18	19
Londonderry	14	101
Tyrone	13	53
Northern Ireland	14	58

For farms similar to those covered in the farm business survey, the average number of beef cows was 27 and the average number of ewes was 126.

Lisnevin Training School

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the research conducted by the Northern Ireland Office, completed in 1993, into the Lisnevin training school, will be published.

Sir John Wheeler: In 1990, the Northern Ireland Office commissioned an independent researcher to carry out a study of young offenders released from all training schools. The researcher submitted a draft of his report for comment in October 1993, to which the office responded in November. The researcher is, we understand, now working on the final version of this report.

While the Northern Ireland Office does not normally itself publish evaluative reports of this kind, it does in principle support the dissemination of research findings from commissioned projects. Any proposal by the author to offer papers based on this research for publication in appropriate journals would, accordingly, be sympathetically considered.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Ancram: Information regarding general correspondence could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

It is no longer standard practice to acknowledge incoming correspondence. Information in respect of ministerial correspondence for the Northern Ireland Office and NI Departments can be obtained from chart 11.4 of the Northern Ireland expenditure plans and priorities, a copy of which is held in the Library. My right hon. Friend will write to the hon. Member about correspondence received by departmental agencies.

Policing Structures

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on policing structures in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Following my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary's examination of policing structures in England and Wales and the report of the Sheehy inquiry, I have examined the operation of the tripartite policing structure in Northern Ireland and believe that some change is necessary.

The present arrangements date back almost a quarter of a century and were designed for very different circumstances. In present conditions, they make it difficult to ensure the police are fully accountable to the concerns and needs of the community as a whole, and to achieve the most effective and efficient use of the considerable resources allocated by Government to the police service in Northern Ireland.

The Government believe that substantial improvements can be achieved in the effectiveness and responsiveness of policing in Northern Ireland by strengthening and rationalising each part of the structure. I accordingly intend to publish a paper setting out views on how to redefine the roles and responsibilities of each of the parties and strengthen lines of accountability, in line with the principles of the citizens charter. The Government are firmly committed to the continuance in Northern Ireland of a tripartite structure of policing, to sustaining the operational independence of the RUC in exercising responsibilities for law enforcement and to ensuring that the Chief Constable is properly accountable to the community in Northern Ireland and is able to make the most effective use of all the resources allocated to policing, without unnecessary beauracracy and duplication.

The Government's aim is that the revised arrangements should create a new and stronger partnership between the police, the community and the Government, working with commitment and efficiency to serve the whole community of Northern Ireland better.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many mothers are no longer living on social benefits as a result of intervention by the Child Support Agency on their behalf.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available. In the long run, we estimate that increased payments of child maintenance under the Child Support Act 1991 will result in some 60,000 to 80,000 lone parents moving off income support. It is expected that the majority of these will move on to family credit. Of lone parents already on family credit, we estimate that around 10,000 will move off this benefit in the long run. These estimates are based on 1987-88-89 family expenditure survey data.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the budget for the Child Support Agency for each of the next three years; and how much public expenditure they expect to release through work in (a) tracking down fathers who never paid maintenance for their children and (b) upgrading the contributions that parents living with another partner on income support make for the welfare of their children.

Mr. Burt: Agency budgets from this year's public expenditure settlement have not yet been finalised. However, planned expenditure in the 1992 settlement is in the table.

No decisions have yet been made about the benefit savings targets for the Child Support Agency next year.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether it is the practice of the Child Support Agency to send to ex-wives the agency's assessment of the wages of the ex-husband; and how this complies with the agency's obligations of secrecy under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Burt: Regulation 10 of the Child Support (Maintenance Assessment Procedure) Regulations 1992 provides for a maintenance assessment notification, which is sent both to the parent with care and to the absent parent, to show the details of both parents' assessable income, so that both have the information necessary to enable them to ask for a review or appeal should they believe there are grounds for this. The Data Protection Act 1984 allows for the disclosure of information which is provided for under other legislation.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to announce his conclusions after his study of the work and operations of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: I have been examining comments and concerns raised about some aspects of the child support arrangements and their implementation, and am considering the first report of the Social Security Select Committee on the operation of the Child Support Act. I shall make an announcement as soon as possible.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures the Child Support Agency is taking to speed up the process by which all cases referred to it are handled.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown, dated December 1993:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking about the measures the Child Support Agency is taking to speed up the processing of cases.

In the light of operational experience over the first three months of activity, we decided there were benefits in terms of productivity in increasing the involvement of our field offices in the processing of cases. The initial part of this process, involving the issuing of maintenance application and enquiry forms has already been transferred from our regional centres to field offices.

The Agency is committed to keeping processing times to a minimum, and we will continue to monitor and evaluate our performance as the business develops.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency since the inception involve the reassessment of maintenance payments by fathers already paying maintenance; and how many cases involve fathers who have previously not paid maintenance; and how many cases involve payments to women who are in receipt of income support.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Mike Hall, dated 17 December 1993:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking questions about the operations of the Child Support Agency.

To the end of October, the Agency has processed over 107,000 cases. Of these 56,800 have resulted in the assessment of maintenance. Figures are not kept on the proportion of these cases in which a maintenance arrangement was already in operation. We estimate, however, that about 50 per cent. of cases taken on by the Agency were already receiving maintenance.

You also asked how many cases involve payments to women who are receiving income support. The Agency does not collect information on the number of assessments made, split by the status of the parent with care of children, so it is not possible to say in how many cases the parent with care was receiving income support.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many inquiry packs were printed by the Child Support Agency; and at what total cost.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 17 December 1993:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for details about the enquiry packs.

The number of maintenance enquiry packs printed in the first year of operations of the Child Support Agency is 1,110,500. These packs contain a maintenance enquiry form, together with a leaflet about the Agency, helpnotes, and, since October 1993, a leaflet explaining the standards a client can expect from the Agency. The total cost was £692,752·82 inclusive of Value Added Tax.

I hope that you find this information useful.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officials are employed in the Child Support Agency; and what is the current total salary bill.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 17 December 1993:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for details about the number of staff employed in the Child Support Agency and the total of their salaries.

At the end of October 1993, the Agency had 4,794 members of staff. The current allocation for staff salaries is £73,780,000.

I hope you find this information useful.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement as to the location of each Child Support Agency in the United Kingdom and give details of the office space used, rent paid and, the accommodation has been purchased, if it is freehold or leasehold.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 17 December 1993:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for details about Child Support Agency accommodation.

The Agency has six major operational centres supported by a network of field staff co-located with Benefits Agency district offices and specialist Headquarters staff in London and Newcastle.

Accommodation for headquarters staff in Newcastle and for field staff in Social Security offices is funded centrally by the Department of Social Security, and is not charged separately to the Agency.

I am pleased to attach information on the remainder of the accommodation as an Annex to this letter.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how quickly the Child Support Agency varies its assessment of wages when evidence can be produced that an earlier assessment of wages is too high.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Paul Channon, dated 17 December 1993:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how quickly the Child Support Agency will reassess a case when evidence is produced that the earlier assessment was based on wages which were too high.

The Child Support Officer (CSO) has a legal requirement, when conducting a review, to notify both parties to the maintenance assessment. Both parties are then allowed to submit evidence to the CSO, and are then given the opportunity to comment on the review. Because of the necessity of gathering a great deal of information to ensure the review is carried out accurately, it is not yet possible to set specific clearance times for reviews. I am happy to reassure you that Agency staff are aware of the need to complete reviews as quickly as possible given the circumstances of each case.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Scott: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. They are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Benefit Cuts

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will be affected by the proposed cuts in invalidity benefit and unemployment benefit announced in November's Budget.

Mr. Scott: All new claimants to incapacity benefit who would have been entitled to invalidity benefit under the current scheme will be affected. Existing invalidity benefit recipients will experience no cash reduction at the point of change; about 200,000 may lose entitlement to incapacity benefit over the first two to three years of the new scheme through application of the new medical test. The number affected by proposals to introduce the new job seeker's allowance will depend on the level of unemployment and the rates of benefit in 1996-97. Our current estimate is that about 250,000 people may at any one time find they would have been better off under the unemployment benefit scheme.

Equal Pensions (Appeal)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the likely impact on the national insurance fund of the appeal to the Court of Appeal in the case of Secretary of State for Social Security and Rose Graham if the appeal by the Secretary of State is dismissed: and how these figures are affected by the announcement on 30 November that the retirement age for both sexes is to be equalised at age 65.

Mr. Hague: The effect on the national insurance fund would depend on the precise terms of the ruling. The latest estimates are shown in the table. Under our proposals, the phased implementation of equal state pension ages will not begin until 2010, and will not affect these estimates.

Estimated cost to National Insurance Fund[4]

Financial year	£ million

1994-95	80

[1] Estimates for later years are not available.

[2] Estimates for 1993-94 include arrears from 1 April 1992, the date of the commissioner's decision.

[3] Estimates for 1995-96 take account of the proposed introduction of incapacity benefit from April 1995.

[4] All estimates are expressed in constant 1994-95 benefit rates, and are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Appointed Day Requirements

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce the appointed day requirements as set out under the Social Security Act 1990.

Mr. Hague: The appointed day requirements in the Social Security Act 1990 refer to the limited price indexation—LPI—of salary-related occupational pensions. The implementation of LPI is one of the many issues for the Government to consider in the light of the recommendations in the Pensions Law Review Committee report "Pension Law Reform" and the responses to our series of discussion papers on non-state pensions issued on 3 December.

European Court of Justice

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the outcome of recent European Court of Justice cases affecting his Department's policies.

Mr. Hague: Since the beginning of April 1993, three such cases have been decided, but none has required a change of policy. In the first case, the European Court of Justice ruled that survivors' benefits in occupational pension schemes should be equal for men and women. It also confirmed that its earlier ruling in the Barber case, requiring equality in occupational pensions, applied only in respect of pensionable service after 17 May 1990. In the second case, the court upheld the validity of national time limits for payment of benefit relating to periods before the date of claim. In the third case, the court held that in certain circumstances occupational "bridging pensions" could be paid to men between the ages of 60 and 65.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Hague: Information for the years 1983 to 1988 is not available in the form requested. The Department of Social Security did not exist independently until August 1988.

The figures for 1988 onwards are in the table. They include the Benefits Agency, Contributions Agency and Child Support Agency where indicated.

	Headquarters	Benefits Agency	Contributions Agency	Child Support Agency
August 1988 to April 1989	8	—	—	—
April 1989 to April 1990	8	—	—	—

[1] Includes one press officer on long-term secondment to Motability.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply time within 15 days.

Mr. Hague: Correspondence to Ministers from hon. Members is registered and an acknowledgement produced on the day of receipt. The departmental target for substantive replies is 20 working days. This has been achieved in 77 per cent. of cases this year to date.

Letters to Ministers from members of the public are not acknowledged due to the large number involved. The target reply is again 20 working days.

The chief executive of the Benefits Agency—BA—tells me that all correspondence received from hon. Members is acknowledged within 24 hours of receipt. The latest available figures show that 51 per cent. of all such letters receive a substantive reply within 15 working days and 84 per cent. within 20 working days.

The BA charter sets out a commitment to reply to correspondence from customers within 10 working days. If only a partial reply is possible within that time, the customer should be told how long it will be before a comprehensive reply can be made.

Of the replies sent by the chief executive of the Contributions Agency—CA—to hon. Members, 46 per cent. were sent within 15 working days and 70 per cent. in 20 working days.

The CA's target is to dispatch either a full reply or an informative response to 95 per cent. of all customer inquiries within 10 working days. In 1992-93, this target was surpassed, with 98·5 per cent. of responses being within this time scale.

All letters from hon. Members to the chief executive of the Child Support Agency—CSA—are now acknowledged on the day of receipt. The agency has a target to reply within 20 working days. The CSA has received 2,027 letters in a short space of time. To date, 458 have received replies. Of these, 63 per cent. were within 15 working days and 75 per cent. within 20 working days.

Letters from members of the public are usually referred to CSA centres to respond on individual cases. Their target is to acknowledge letters within two working days, which has been successful in 90 per cent. of cases, and to send a full reply within 10 working days. This has been achieved in 65 per cent. of cases.

The chief executive of the Information Technology Services Agency received only 15 letters last year. All were acknowledged within five days and 14 of the 15 replies were sent in 15 days.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the regional and area offices of his Department, and of inspectorates, agencies, and other public bodies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Hague: In view of the length of this reply, I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Child Support

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the formula for phasing in child support maintenance; if he will limit the increase in maintenance payments in cases of an existing court and order.

Mr. Burt: The existing provisions for phasing in child support maintenance payments apply where an absent parent with a court order or written maintenance agreement has a second family and a new liability of less than £60 a week which is over £20 more than his previous liability. In these circumstances the amount of any increase will be limited to £20 for the first 12 months. The Social Security Select Committee has recommended an extension of these arrangements. I am still considering the Committee's report and shall make an announcement as soon as possible.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the decision not to restore disability living allowance to Daniel Mark Hadlow, JJ 57 29 82 C.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Barry Field, dated 16 December 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away on annual leave at the moment, I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security. This was about the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claim for D. Hadlow.

I should explain that all claims to DLA are decided by independent adjudicating authorities who are specially appointed for this purpose under legislation approved by Parliament. They are responsible for deciding if the conditions for entitlement are satisfied. Neither Ministers nor officials of the Benefits Agency can influence or alter decisions made by these authorities.

In order to provide you with the full details personal to this case I have written separately to you.

Pensioners

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people over state pension age are expected to qualify for (a) basic state pension at the full rate, (b) basic state pension at a reduced rate, (c) an element of state earnings-related pension scheme and (d) an element of income support in the tax years (i) 1993-94, (ii) 1998-99, (iii) 2003-4 and (iv) 2008-9.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 29 November 1993]: The information is in the table.

Estimated proportion of people over state pension age expected to be entitled to:

	Full-rate basic retirement pension Per cent.	Less than full-rate basic retirement pension Per cent.	Some SERPS Per cent.	Income support Per cent.
1993-94	66	28	40	16
1998-99	67	28	53	—
2003-04	67	29	67	—
2008-09	68	29	80	—

Note:

No figures readily available for income support entitlement for 1998-99, 2003-04 and 2008-09 but the analysis which underpins "The Growth of Social Security" for 1999-2000 is consistent with a relatively unchanged percentage to the end of the century.

Benefits

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the saving in the whole range of social security benefits, including exemption from prescription charges and other associated benefits, if everybody were deemed to have earned £100 per week between the ages of 18 to 65 years who was fit and able to work.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 6 December 1993]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. It is estimated that if everybody between the ages of 18 to 65 who was fit and able to work earned £100 per week gross of tax and national insurance contributions there would be a reduction in expenditure on social security benefits and on welfare foods and free school meals for social security benefits recipients of approximately £17 billion in the financial year. It is not possible to estimate what effect this change would have on the NHS low-income scheme which exempts those on low incomes from prescription, dental and optical charges.

Any savings would, of course, be offset by future expenditure arising from entitlement gained to retirement pension and other contributory benefits.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he is yet in a position to publish the discussion papers on occupational pensions issues to which he referred in his statement to the House on 3 November, Official Report, columns 354-65.

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1993, c. 817]: The final two discussion papers will be published today. Copies of the papers will be placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry Commission

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all Forestry Commission woods in the Newbury constituency.

Mr. Jack: The only Forestry Commission woodland in the hon. Member's constituency is part of Cake wood, near Hungerford.

Milk Industry

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how she proposes to compensate those milk producers who choose not to join Milk Marque, the successor to the Milk Marketing Board, for resources employed by the Milk Marketing Board in seeking to establish Milk Marque as the dominant force in the milk industry.

Mr. Jack: Expenditure by the Milk Marketing Board on promoting its proposed successor body, Milk Marque, has been approved by the EC Commission under state aid rules. The board's reorganisation scheme makes no provision for repayment of part of the sum in question to producers who choose not to join the successor body. Nor, so far as I am aware, does the board have plans to do so outside the framework of the reorganisation scheme. It is not for Government to make proposals in this regard.

Fisheries Conservation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the alternative conservation document prepared by the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations, a copy of which has been sent to her; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: As I informed the House in the annual fisheries debate on 14 December, Official Report, columns 894-936, valuable work has been done by the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations on technical conservation. I will discuss these ideas with the industry and will wish to see what part it can play in balancing conservation and fishing effort and meeting our Community obligations.

Slaughtermen

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average number of units per year one slaughterman is able to deal with in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland for the most recent year in which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not available in the format required.

Equine Industry

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her reply of 6 December, Official Report, column 262, if she will make a statement on her meeting of 9 December with representatives of the equine industry; and what action has been taken and will be taken by her Department to combat and eliminate equine viral arteritis.

Mr. Soames: I had a useful discussion on 9 December with representatives of the equine industry on possible ways of providing horse owners with increased protection from infection with equine viral arteritis, particularly from "carrier" stallions. I undertook to prepare proposals for further consultation with the industry, while making it clear that the Government cannot undertake any liability for compensation in connection with this disease.

Forestry, Hillsborough

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all Forestry Commission woods in the constituency of Sheffield, Hillsborough.

Mr. Jack: The only Forestry Commission woodland in the hon. Member's constituency is part of Wharncliffe wood.

Less-favoured Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average size of farm holding in the less-favoured areas as sampled by (a) the most recent farm business survey and (b) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data she has available, by county and in England.

Mr. Jack: The table provides information on the average size, in hectares, of cattle and sheep farms, wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas—LFAs—in England from the agricultural census as at June 1992. As the farm business survey covers only farms that are considered to be full-time commercial businesses, very small farms are excluded from the survey. The average size of cattle and sheep LFA farms in England as estimated from the farm business survey sample for 1992-93 is 159 hectares, compared with 130 hectares for similar farms in the agricultural census at June 1992. Results from the farm business survey are not available by county.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the autumn review of hill livestock compensatory allowances statistical tables and charts draws on information published in the annual farm business survey; and what other sources of information are used to establish farm size, livestock and numbers and farm income indices.

Mr. Jack: The data on farm incomes which is presented in the statistical tables and charts are derived from the farm business survey in England, Wales and Northern Ireland and the farm accounts system in Scotland. Data on livestock numbers are derived from the agricultural census and from records of the claims for hill livestock compensatory allowances. When average survey results of two or more groups of sample farms are combined, the results for each group are given a weight proportional to the total number of holdings in that group recorded at the June agricultural census.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Straw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the regional and area offices of her Department, and of inspectorates, agencies, and other public bodies for which she is responsible.

Mr. Jack: The information requested by the hon. Member is included in the publications "At the Farmers' Service", section 10, and "Public Bodies 1992". Copies of both publications are lodged in the Library of the House of Commons.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of correspondence received by (a) her Ministry and (b) each of her Ministry's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry keeps central records of the time taken to reply to Ministers' correspondence, but does not have a central record in relation to letters replied to by civil servants.

This Department's target is for Ministers to reply within 21 days of receipt to letters from hon. Members and noble Lords. In the past 12 months, Ministers received 11,053 of these letters and 7,516—68 per cent.—were replied to within 21 days. Our records do not indicate how many replies were sent within 15 days and correspondence is not generally acknowledged.

Correspondence dealt with solely by executive agencies is a matter for which responsibility is delegated to them and I have therefore asked the chief executives to reply to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 17 December 1993:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the speed of the Intervention Board's replies to correspondence.

The Agency's target when letters require an answer from the Chief Executive is for me to reply within 10 working days of receiving a letter. Correspondence is not routinely acknowledged. The percentage of replies within this deadline in the last year was 89·7 per cent.

Letter from Dr. Julian Walsh to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 16 December 1993:

The Minister has asked me to reply to part (b) of your question concerning acknowledgements and replies of correspondence.

The ADAS Agency keeps central records of the time taken to reply to Chief Executive's correspondence with MPs but does not have central records related to letters replied to by its staff.

The ADAS target for despatch of reply to Chief Executive correspondence with MPs is ten working days. The percentage of such letters replies to within this deadline in the last year was 100 per cent. If it is anticipated that a substantive reply will take more than five working days to despatch, all correspondence is routinely acknowledged.

Letter from Dr. P. I. Stanley to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 17 December 1993:

In its Charter Standards Statement the Central Science Laboratory (CSL) stated its aim to answer correspondence within three weeks of its receipt. Where a full reply cannot be given within this time scale an interim response is sent as soon as possible within the three week period and the reason for the delay is given together with the name and telephone number of the person dealing with the correspondence.

CSL's Charter Standards Statement was published in July 1993. All staff were alerted to the need to adhere to this standard and office procedures have been introduced to ensure that correspondence is dealt with efficiently. Our records do not indicate how many replies were sent within 15 days and we do not acknowledge correspondence as a matter of routine.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 17 December 1993:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the Ministry of Agriculture and its Agencies response time for correspondence.

The CVL carries out the majority of its work on a contract basis for MAFF and other Government and commercial customers. Enquiries tend to be technical, specific and to a named individual. No central record is kept of this. However, the Agency has recently set a target for replies to general enquiries relating to our work. Our aim is to provide a full reply within fifteen working days. If it becomes evident that a delay is likely we advise the correspondent immediately.

Since this arrangement is a new procedure we do not yet have the historical records to judge our performance against this target. These will be available in 1994.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 17 December 1993:

The Pesticides Safety Directorate aims to deal efficiently and helpfully with all correspondence received. The central Information Section received 3,567 written enquiries in the period 1 April to 30 November and 96 per cent. of these were acknowledged within five days. Our records to not indicate how many substantive replies were sent within 15 days but every effort is made to respond quickly.

Our Policy Group deals with Ministers' correspondence for MAFF on pesticide issues and observes the standards set by the Ministry in respect of response times. We do not have central records of other correspondence dealt with by the staff of the Agency.

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 16 December 1993:

The Minister of State has asked me to reply for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) to your Question about the response time for correspondence in the Ministry's Agencies.

The VMD receives approximately 11,500 items of external correspondence each year. Unless an immediate reply is appropriate, all should receive an acknowledgement within five days. The length of time taken to provide a substantive reply where one is required will vary dependent on the nature and complexity of the issues raised. For those letters sent on behalf of Ministers, in the last year 97 per cent. received a reply within 21 days. Our records do not indicate how many of these replies were sent within 15 days.

Thames Cockle Fishery

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when there will be a public inquiry into the proposed regulating order for the Thames cockle fishery.

Mr. Jack: A public inquiry will be held if the objections which have been made in relation to the Kent and Essex sea fisheries committee's proposed regulating order are not withdrawn. I understand that the committee has not yet ruled out the possibility of meeting the objectors' concerns.

Agriculture Council

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels between 13 and 16 December; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Agriculture Council, which took place from 13 to 17 December.

The Council reached agreement on changes to the regionalisation and set-aside rules under the arable regime; on measures to implement the agreement between the European Community and the United States on oilseeds; on changes to the agrimonetary system; on a one-year rollover of the sugar regime; and on a number of other issues. With the exception of oilseeds, all measures were agreed unanimously.

The Council had been considering set-aside since July and decisions were long overdue. The agreement met the United Kingdom's two key aims. The set-aside requirement for mixtures of rotational and non-rotational set-aside in the United Kingdom will be 18 per cent. of a farm's arable area, the same as for non-rotational set-aside, not 20 per cent. as originally proposed. Farmers finishing a five-year set-aside scheme will be able to enter all the land in that scheme into arable set-aside for a further five years, including, for those who finished five-year agreement this autumn, any land already cultivated for harvest in 1994.

It was also agreed that there will be changes to alleviate the impact of the overshoot of the main arable base area in Scotland. This will be widely welcomed there.

In addition, the Commission will examine the relationship between set-aside and land withdrawn from production for woodland or environmental purposes. While this does not go as far as I would like, it represents an important step forward.

On oilseeds, the Council decided that any cuts in aid arising under the agreement with the United States should fall on those member states in which the area of oilseeds exceeds a level calculated by reference to the 1989-91 average area, but with certain adjustments. I regarded this as unsatisfactory and, with Portugal, voted against.

The changes agreed to the agrimonetary system will reduce the likelihood of green rate revaluations. The Council did not, however, accede to the request by some member states to extend the potentially costly switchover mechanism to floating currencies.

The sugar regime will be extended for a further year, until the end of June 1995. This will enable it to be revised from 1 July 1995 to take account of the Community's new obligations under the GATT and other factors.

The Council agreed to maintain the current level of imports of butter from New Zealand for 1994, pending the implementation of the GATT agreement. The Council also approved voluntary restraint agreements on the import of sheepmeat from third countries during 1994 which will broadly continue 1993 quantities.

Agreement was reached on the abolition of the headage limit on the annual ewe premium and on provisions permitting member states to attach environmental conditions to the payment of the ewe premium and the beef special premium. These were measures particularly sought by the United Kingdom and the ending of headage limits will be especially welcomed by producers.

Agreement was reached on a measure to improve the welfare of animals at slaughter. But I refused to support proposals on the welfare of animals during transport since, in their present form, they would have allowed unacceptably long intervals between feeding and watering and minimum rest periods that were too short. These proposals clearly need further discussion.

The Council decided that the current moratorium on the use of bovine somatotrophin should be extended for one further year instead of for the longer period proposed by the Commission. It also reached agreement on a proposal on harmonised charging arrangements for the veterinary inspection of fresh meat and on a Community system for inspection of meat from third countries.

I drew the attention of the Council to the serious implications for United Kingdom glasshouse lettuce and other vegetable growers of a proposed Commission measure to control nitrate levels in lettuce. I pointed out that the Scientific Committee for Food was, in any case, still considering the advice it should put forward on the intake of nitrate from vegetables. I am glad to say that the Commissioner accepted the need to examine this issue in the light of both the public health and the economic implications. He confirmed that the Commission would act in the light of the further advice that it expected from the scientific committee.

Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement about the implementation of the Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987.

Mr. Soames: Many questions have been raised on the application of the Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987, which come fully into force on 1 January 1995. It is our intention that the regulations should be applied sensibly and consistently. A paper has been prepared by the Agriculture Departments in order to provide detailed guidance to producers on the approach which it is intended to follow. The paper has been placed in the Library of the House and copies will be made available to producers and any others with an interest.

Forests, Honiton

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the Forestry Commission woods in the Honiton constituency.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 13 December 1993]: The Forestry Commission is preparing such a list and I shall send a copy to my right hon. Friend as soon as possible. I shall also arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Farm Incomes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average net farm income and average cash income per livestock farm in the less-favoured areas and per lowland livestock farm for each year since 1982.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 December 1993]: Estimates of net farm income and cash income based on results of the farm business survey are provided in the tables. The method of farm classification has been changed and results are only available on the new classification from 1986-87 onwards. Estimates for lowland cattle and sheep farms for 1992-93 are not yet available.

Year-to-year comparisons can best be made by reference to the indices shown in the tables, which are based on results from constant samples of farms.

WALES

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Redwood: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. They are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the name and job description of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on Thursday 4 November, Official Report, column 334.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Redwood: Reliable information on fuel costs is available only from 1 April 1990, when my Department assumed responsibility for direct payment of fuel bills.

The required information from 1990-91 is given in the following table.

Health Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many posts for salaried dentists in Wales have been advertised for each health authority area; how many posts have been requested by each family health service authority; how many inquiries were received for the posts; how many applications were received for each post; and how many appointments have been made.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: 1. The number of salaried dentists posts requested by family health services authorities in Wales are as follows:

Clwyd—two applications under consideration.

Dyfed—four, of which two were approved.

Gwynedd—26 of which four were approved. The other applications will be reviewed when the approved vacancies are filled.

Powys—two, of which one was approved and another is under consideration.

2. The number of posts advertised, inquiries and applications received and appointments made to date are:

	Post advertised	Enquiries received	Applications received	Appointments made
Dyfed	1	13	6	1
Gwynedd	4	6	2	1

Public Bodies

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many appointments he has made to non-departmental public bodies in Wales where one of the nominators was an hon. Member representing a Welsh constituency.

Mr. Redwood: Since becoming Secretary of State for Wales, I have appointed one member of a national health service body who was referred to the Department by an hon. Member representing a Welsh constituency; there have been no such appointments to executive non-departmental public bodies.

Cows and Ewes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what according to (a) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data he has available and (b) the farm business survey, was the average number of (1) beef cows and (2) ewes, carried on less-favoured areas livestock farms, by county and in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the average number of beef cows and ewes on cattle and sheep farms, wholly or mainly in less-favoured areas in Wales, according to the agricultural census of June 1992 is shown in the following table. The farm business survey is a sample survey of only those farms which are considerd to be full-time commercial businesses and excludes very small farms. Also, unlike the census it records the average number of livestock on the holding throughout the year. On livestock farms wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas the average numbers of beef cows and ewes recorded by the farm business survey on farms in Wales in 1992-93 were 20 and 643 respectively. The equivalent information at county level is not available.

Farm Holdings

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the averge size of farm holding in the less-favoured areas as sampled by (a) the most recent farm business survey and (b) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data he has available, by county and in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The farm business survey is a sample survey of only those farms which are considered to be full-time commercial businesses and excludes very small farms. The average size of cattle and sheep farms in Wales, wholly or mainly in less-favoured areas, as recorded in the farm business survey for 1992-93 is 125 hectares. The equivalent information at county level is not available. The June agricultural census covers all main holdings and the average size of cattle and sheep farms, wholly or mainly in less-favoured areas, according to the census of June 1992, is shown in the following table:

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the headteacher of Cwm Carn school left his post; what the grounds were for his departure; and who is responsible for the payment of severence costs involved.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I understand that the resignation of Mr. Frank Elliott, the head of Cwmcarn grant-maintained school, is to take effect from 31 December 1993. The reasons for his departure are a matter between him and his employers, the governing body of the school. The responsibility for any financial settlement is that of the governing body, although my Department is making a contribution through a special purpose grant for staff restructuring.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Redwood: The available information is as follows:

Departmental correspondence received since 1 January 1993

Acknowledged within five days	100	100

[2] The Department has a target for replies to issue within 15 working days. Each division monitors its performance against the target; information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the draft ward boundaries proposed for the planned unitary authorities were sent to local councils; and if he will place a copy of the boundaries in the Library.

Mr. Redwood: I shall consult Welsh local authorities on proposed electoral areas soon and I will place a copy of my proposals in the Library.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds will be made available to Cardiff Bay development corporation in the next financial year.

Mr. Redwood: During 1994-95 my Department will make available to Cardiff Bay development corporation grant in aid of £48·2 million.

National Health Service

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funding he proposes to make available to the national health service in Wales in 1994-95 and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Spending on the NHS in Wales will increase by £100 million from £1,975 million to £2,076 million, which represents a cash increase of over 5 per cent. —well ahead of retail inflation and pay increases—or an extra £35 for every man, woman and child in Wales. This will bring expenditure up to £716 next year for every person in Wales, or nearly £3,000 for an average family.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The information requested is shown in the following table. The figures for cash spend have been deflated using the GDP deflator, which is currently estimated to be running at a much higher level than the RPI or pay increases. These figures can therefore mislead on the true real value of the cash sums.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. David Davis: The cost in 1990-91 to the then Office of the Minister for the Civil Service for use of the Government car service by its departmental Minister and the Government Whips was £243,931.

Charters

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much has been paid out in financial compensation for the failure of (a) the British Rail passengers charter, (b) London Underground customers charter, (c) Northern Ireland Railways passengers charter, (d) Contributions Agency contributors charter, (e) Contributions Agency employers charter and (f) the Benefits Agency customer charter, to meet their stated targets.

Mr. Waldegrave: British Rail, London Underground Ltd. and Northern Ireland Railways have paid an estimated £4,590,000 in financial compensation as a result of failure to meet stated targets. This is broken down as follows:

Charter	Compensation paid (nearest £'000)	From	To
British Rail passengers charter	4,427	April 1992	November 1993
London Underground customers charter	162	August 1992	8 December 1993
Northern Ireland Railways passengers charter	1	November 1992	30 November 1993

In addition, the Contributions Agency and Benefits Agency have paid an estimated £4,147,000 in special payments, broken down as follows:

Charter	Compensation paid (nearest £'000)	From	To
Contributions Agency contributors and employers charters[1]	76	April 1991	March 1993
Benefits Agency customer charter	4,071	April 1992	March 1993

[1] Separate figures are not available for the Contributions Agency contributors and Contributions Agency employers charters. The figures represent payments made from April 1991, four months before the Contributions Agency charters were introduced.

NORWEB

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the reasons for the award to NORWEB of a charter mark.

Mr. Waldegrave: NORWEB was awarded a charter mark because it was able to demonstrate to the Prime Minister's advisory panel on the citizens charter, by reference to its nine charter mark criteria, that it had achieved the required high degree of excellence in its services to the public.

Special Advisers

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what redundancy terms apply to Ministers' specialist advisers.

Mr. Waldegrave: Appointments of special advisers automatically terminate with the end of the Administration, or on the day after polling day in a general election, or when their appointing Minister leaves his or her present post, or if they resign to take part in national political activities or for other reasons. In some of those circumstances, they may be reappointed. Otherwise, severance payments, subject to tax and national insurance, are made in accordance with the scale in the following table.

	Number of months pay in lieu of notice for those aged:
Years of service	Under 34	34	35 and above
Less than two	3	3·0	3
Two but less than three	3	3·5	4
Three but less than four	3	4·0	5
Four and over	3	4·5	6

All special advisers, regardless of age, are entitled to one month's severance pay if their appointment is made within six months of the latest date by which a general election must take place, or if they resign to take part in national political activities within six months of their appointment.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. David Davis: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. They are not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the name and job description of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have appointed Mr. David Rutley to be my political adviser. Mr. Rutley will take up his appointment on 4 January 1994. His duties will vary. Dr. John Nicholson provides me with expert advice on a range of issues relating to public sector management.

Market Testing

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will detail the estimated cost of market testing by each Department in the current financial year; and what was the actual cost to each Department at current prices in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme ran from April 1992 to September 1993. The 1993-94 programme runs from October 1993 to September 1994. It is not possible, from centrally held information, to detail the cost of market testing by Department for the current and 1992-93 financial years.

The cost of market testing by Department for the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme will be published in the citizens charter second report.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which government Departments, non-departmental public bodies and next steps agencies are undergoing market testing at present; and which are planned to undergo market testing in the near future.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the "Citizen's Charter First Report"; the supporting material to my announcement of 4 November 1993 to the House of Commons Official Report, columns 526-37, on the "Competing for Quality" programme; and the "Market Testing Bulletin", all of which have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Waldegrave: Correspondence received by my office from 1 January to 30 November 1993 has generally been acknowledged within five working days, with the exception of write-in campaigns. For correspondence receiving a ministerial reply, 67 per cent. received a substantive reply within 15 working days, which is the departmental target. For correspondence receiving an official reply, 71 per cent. received a substantive reply within 20 working days, which is the departmental target. No record is kept against a 15-working-day target for official replies.

The above figures include correspondence passed to agencies for replies to be drafted for ministerial signature. The position for correspondence received direct by agencies and answered by them is as follows:

Chessington Computer Centre
From 1 January to 30 November 1993 100 per cent. of written enquiries were acknowledged within 10 working days. 97 per cent. received a substantive reply within one calendar month. No records are kept against other targets.

Civil Service College
Correspondence from customers concerning courses has a target reply time of 24 hours. General correspondence has a target of 15 working days, with as much as possible answered within five. The College keeps no records against these targets.

No records are held centrally of other correspondence received by HMSO.

Public Bodies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what record is kept of the number of individuals who hold multiple positions on public bodies: and what is the policy in respect of their remuneration.

Mr. Waldegrave: Responsibility for the 42,000 appointments to public bodies rests with individual Ministers and their Departments. No central record is kept of those appointed.

The majority of public appointments are part time and unpaid. Those which are paid are the more senior public appointments which place greater demands on the individual, in terms of the size of the task and the time commitment. The remuneration for such appointments recognises this, and the Cabinet Office "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures" makes clear that in setting remuneration appropriate account should be taken of any existing paid public appointments.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Closures

Mr. Bates: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, how many churches in the diocese of Durham have been closed since 1984; and for what reasons.

Mr. Alison: Since 1 January 1984, nine out of some 310 churches in the Durham diocese have been declared redundant under the provisions of the Pastoral Measure 1983. Two had not been used since 1964, one was replaced by a new place of worship and the remaining six were no longer required as parish churches or chapels of ease. We have been notified of one further new place of worship opening in the same period.

Theological Colleges

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what funding the Church Commissioners provide to support theological colleges in England.

Mr. Norris: The Department has responded to various sections of the media to the effect that the Channel 4 TV programme "Dispatches" broadcast on 8 December has not produced any material evidence on the loss of the Marchioness which was not considered by the marine accident investigation branch inquiry in 1989.

Transport Projects

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the public transport projects the Government are planning to invest in outside London.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the Secretary of State for Transport's reply on 15 December 1993 to the hon. Tables 4 and 5 detail the package bids and local public transport projects to which resources will be allocated in 1994-95. A large part of the future public investment in the railway industry will also take place outside London.

Traffic Management

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what staffing resources he has allocated to the monitoring and compliance of enforcement and traffic management duties undertaken by the police.

Mr. Key: In the first instance, it is the responsibility of individual chief officers of police to monitor the performance of their force. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has the statutory duty of promoting the efficiency of police and there is constant liaison between his officials and mine about all the aspects of traffic policing. It is neither necessary nor appropriate for any of my officials to undertake any systematic monitoring of the way in which the police perform their traffic duties.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all enforcement and traffic management duties arising out of transport legislation which are currently the responsibility of the Home Secretary.

Mr. Key: Chief officers of police have responsibility for a wide range of traffic management and enforcement duties. A complete list could be provided only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he is giving to routing the channel tunnel rail link to King's Cross/St. Pancras in a deep tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Union Railways' report, which we received on 29 October, includes a tunnel alternative to the surface route to St. Pancras along the north London line corridor. We are considering the information contained in the report, together with the many comments we have received during the consultation process, and will announce our decisions early in the new year.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters he has received from Islington residents in support of a deep tunnel link of the proposed channel tunnel link between Stratford and King's Cross/St. Pancras.

Mr. Freeman: In response to Union Railways' latest proposals we have received some 980 letters—and petitions with a total of 340 signatories—in support of a tunnel alternative to the surface route to St. Pancras along the north London line corridor.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the number of Islington residents on the route of the surface channel rail link who will be affected by noise and vibration (a) during construction and (b) during train operation.

Mr. Freeman: Union Railways' specialist consultants have assessed the scale of the noise and vibration impacts as part of their comparative appraisal of the options presented in Union Railways' report. Their work formed part of Union Railways' report to Government and will be published when the Government's decisions are announced.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Islington residents live within (a) 25, (b) 50, (c) 100 or (d) 250 m of the proposed channel tunnel surface link to King's Cross-St. Pancras.

London Buses

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what meetings he has held with the board of London Buses to discuss route tendering and contracts; what conditions he has laid down for (a) London Buses and (b) private operators in the provision of licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State and I meet the chairman of London Transport regularly to discuss topics of mutual interest, including the development of a programme for tendering all LT's bus routes, whether currently operated by London Buses Ltd. subsidiaries or private operators, on a net cost basis. LT will announce the form and scope of the new arrangements in the new year.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many London Buses staff have been made redundant in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 to date; and what was the cost to London Buses and the Government in each of those years.

Some 19,023 ministerial letters were answered in this period.

Information about executive agencies' correspondence is not held centrally. This is a matter for the chief executives concerned.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures have been taken to improve safety in the Severn tunnel following the accident in 1991.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has implemented several measures to improve the detection of faults and maintenance of equipment. Interested parties are continuing to look at ways of improving liaison and site arrangements for the emergency services.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures have been taken to improve safety throughout the British rail system following the Severn tunnel accident in 1991.

Mr. Freeman: Where appropriate, the improvements being implemented at the Severn tunnel will be applied at other locations on the British Rail network.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the Seymour inquiry report on the Severn tunnel accident which occurred in October 1991.

Heathrow and South-West Quadrant Report

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the Heathrow west and south-west quadrant orbital movements study report.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Yes. Copies of the Heathrow access and south-west quadrant study report have now been placed in the House Library.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations he had with the national marine safety steering committee before the Ministry of Defence decision on search and rescue provision on 7 December;

(2) how many representations he made in respect of the Ministry of Defence review of search and rescue provision in south-west England and west Wales;

(3) when he was informed that the Ministry of Defence was reviewing its decision of October 1992 on search and rescue provision in south-west England and west Wales;

(4) what part his Department played in the review of search and rescue provision in south-west England and west Wales before the announcement made by the Ministry of Defence on 7 December;

(5) what consultations he had with the Wales district marine safety sub-committee before the Ministry of Defence decision on search and rescue provision of 7 December;

(6) when he was informed of the decision of the 1993 Ministry of Defence review of search and rescue provision in south-west England and west Wales.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 16 December 1993]: In October 1992, the MOD announced the decision to transfer Sea King coverage in the area from RAF Brawdy to RAF Chivenor, as part of the future provision of RAF search and rescue helicopters. In March this year, the Ministry of Defence informed the Department of Transport that a review of RAF training establishments was being carried out by RAF Support Command, which would include the future of RAF Chivenor. Officials in my Department discussed the implications of this for civil search and rescue. The Minister for Aviation and Shipping was informed on 6 December of the outcome of the MOD review of flying establishments and that the 1992 SAR decisions would stand. The United Kingdom search and rescue committee is responsible for reviewing the general arrangements for civil maritime and aviation search and rescue. Since the committee accepted the decisions in the 1992 open government document, there was no need to refer the conclusions of the review of training establishments to the committee.

Suppliers List

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Italian company Arc-Sipra seeking to be included on his Department's approved list of suppliers; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 9 December 1993]: We have not received any communication from the company Arc-Sipra.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Review

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings he has had with representatives of the trading standards organisations in respect of the local government review.

Mr. Baldry: I shall be meeting Sir Gordon Borrie and my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden, (Mr. Mills), on behalf of the Institute of Trading Standards Administration, on 12 January 1994.

Urban Regeneration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the initiatives through which urban regeneration funds have been made available and the amount that his Department provided.

Sir George Young: Several Government Departments contribute to urban regeneration through a wide range of programmes. My Department's main targeted urban group programmes are:

City Challenge/Urban Programme
City Grant/English Partnerships (URA)
Derelict Land Grant
Urban Development Corporations
Inner City Task Forces
City Action Teams

Figures for total public expenditure under these initiatives were provided in my reply to the hon. Member on 29 November, Official Report, column 381.

From 1 April 1994, the single regeneration budget will bring together 20 existing Government programmes worth over £1·4 billion in 1994-95.

Homelessness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the number of people likely to be homeless over Christmas.

Sir George Young: My Department makes no estimates of the number of households likely to become homeless. In the three months to 30 September 1993, local authorities in England accepted 33,690 households as statutorily homeless. This is some 1,910—5 per cent.—fewer than in the same period last year; the total of acceptances for the latest 12 months has now fallen in each of the last six quarters.

As part of the £86 million rough sleepers initiative, the Government are funding the voluntary sector to run seven winter shelters for single people sleeping rough in central London. Around 360 bed spaces are being provided from 1 December to 31 March. A further 280 places are available at short notice in the event of particularly severe weather.

Sunday Shopping

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the magnitude of increased emissions of air pollutants that would arise as a result of increased traffic and electricity consumption created by full deregulation of Sunday shopping.

Mr. Yeo: No specific evaluations have been carried out. However, my Department's monitoring programme indicates that concentrations of sulphur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide and carbon monoxide are currently on average lower on Sundays than on weekdays by 16 to 26 per cent. in London.

Air Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total budget for the enhanced urban network air pollution monitoring programme for the current year and for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Yeo: The total budget for the enhanced urban network air pollution monitoring programme for the current year—1993-94—is £2·722 million. The spend in 1994-95 will be determined when tenders from contractors have been assessed.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by which date he intends to complete the expansion of the enhanced urban network air pollution monitoring programme to 24 towns and cities, as discussed in his recent consultation paper on air quality monitoring networks.

Mr. Yeo: The date for completion of the expansion of the enhanced urban network air pollution monitoring programme will be decided in the light of responses to the consultation paper on air quality monitoring networks.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue a discussion paper on the best ways of bringing pollution levels down to achieve new air quality targets or guidelines.

Mr. Yeo: Shortly.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the second report of the quality of urban air review group.

Mr. Yeo: The second report of the quality of urban air review group will be published in January 1994.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total budget for his air quality research programme for the current year and for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Yeo: The budget for air quality research for the current year—1993-94—is £9·657 million. The allocation for 1994-95 will be settled in due course.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce new air quality standards for ground level ozone, benzene and carbon monoxide.

Mr. Yeo: Reports by the expert panel on air quality standards recommending standards for ozone and benzene will be published shortly. The panel is still considering recommendations on carbon monoxide.

Radon Gas

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of deaths from radon each year in the United Kingdom; what proportion of the United Kingdom housing stock has been surveyed for radon; what proportion of the housing stock has had remedial action taken; and whether data held by his Department on households where radon levels have been found to exceed the action level will be made available to environmental health departments so that remedial action can be encouraged.

Mr. Yeo: The Department of the Environment has been advised by the National Radiological Protection Board—NRPB—that an estimated 2,000 cases of lung cancer per annum may be attributable to the presence of radon in houses. It is the Government's policy to encourage measurements in radon-affected areas which are designated by the NRPB. We estimate that in those areas some 150,000 dwellings have been measured so far, which represents approximately 11 per cent. of the local housing stock. Regular reports of survey findings are provided to environmental health officers for the local authorities concerned. Reliable estimates of the number of households where remedial action has been taken are not available.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made by his Department of the likely increase in annual carbon dioxide emissions from the additional heating and lighting of shops, and additional traffic generated from increased levels of Sunday trading.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has not undertaken a formal review on the impact on the environment resulting from the proposed change in Sunday trading laws, but estimates suggest that any increase in annual CO_2 emissions is likely to be negligible. The expectation is that there will not be a significant effect on overall traffic levels, taking the week as a whole.

Biodiversity

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan will accord with the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources guidelines for the preparation of biodiversity plans.

Mr. Yeo: We aim to publish the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan after the House returns in the new year. The plan will explain our strategy for conserving wildlife and habitats. Account has been taken of the IUCN guidelines for the preparation of biodiversity plans.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make the conservation of biodiversity an integral part of all Government policy and action.

Mr. Yeo: We aim to publish the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan after the House returns in the new year. The plan will explain our strategy for conserving wildlife and habitats including the role of Government policy.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the part to be played by the biodiversity action plan in helping to protect sites of special scientific interest and other important wildlife sites from neglect and destruction.

Mr. Yeo: We aim to publish the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan after the House returns in the new year. The plan will explain our strategy for conserving wildlife and habitats including protected areas.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those bodies that he has consulted in the last two months with regard to the preparation of the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan.

Mr. Yeo: We have consulted widely during the preparation of the plan. We received more than 1,000 pages of text from some 300 organisations on framework and content, and many of the views and ideas expressed have been incorporated as appropriate in parts of the plan. A two-day seminar organised by the Department of the Environment and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, held at the Royal Geographical Society in May, also assisted this process. A number of individuals and organisations outside Government have contributed to and commented on parts of the plan document. During the past two months, effort has concentrated on final drafting, design and printing rather than consultation.

Passenger Transport

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consideration he has given to funding local passenger transport executives by precept;

(2) what representations he has received from local passenger transport executives on being funded by a precept.

Mr. Baldry: Passenger transport executives—PTEs—and passenger transport authorities—PTAs—are funded by levies issued by PTAs to constituent local authorities. One PTE and a number of PTAs have made representations that they should, instead, be funded by a precept. But it is the Government's view that the present arrangements are appropriate.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Gummer: There are currently 16 press officers employed by the Department of the Environment's information directorate.

Figures for prior years on the composition of the information directorate as a whole are published each year within the management information system for Ministers —MINIS—dating back to 1979 and are available in the Library.

Tenants Incentive Scheme

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of the tenants' incentive scheme in helping those who would otherwise not have been able to afford it to buy their own home.

Sir George Young: My Department has commissioned independent research into the effectiveness of the tenants incentive scheme by the Harris Research Centre. I expect to receive the report early in the new year.

Aggregates

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many tonnes of aggregate dredged from British coastal waters was exported in each of the last five years;

(2) how many licences have been issued for aggregate dredging in British coastal waters in each of the last five years;

(3) how many tonnes of aggregate were dredged from British coastal waters in each of the last five years.

Mr. Baldry: The Crown Estate licences the extraction of sand and gravel from British coastal waters and collects statistics relating to those licences. The Crown Estate has provided my Department with the following information.

Year[1]	Total amount dredged (tonnes)[2]	Amount exported (tonnes)	Number of licences issued
1988	25,807,914	2,379,391	8
1989	28,038,429	2,528,839	6
1990	25,281,728	3,817,947	Nil
1991	20,343,856	4,613,982	8
1992	20,559,002	6,317,232	Nil

[1] Figures for 1993 not available yet.

[2] Includes beach nourishment and contract fill.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what environmental safeguards exist for the dredging of aggregate in British coastal waters.

Mr. Baldry: The decision to grant a licence for the extraction of marine sand and gravel rests with the Crown Estate after consultation with those whose interests may be affected by the proposed dredging. My Department is responsible for co-ordinating these consultations and formulating the Government view. Each proposal is considered on its merits and careful consideration is given to all potential environmental impacts before deciding whether or not to grant a favourable Government view. On the basis of a favourable Government view, the Crown Estate will decide whether to issue a licence to dredge and will lay down appropriate conditions to protect marine and coastal interests.

Water-efficient Homes

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which statutory provisions ensure the building of water-efficient homes in (a) the public and (b) the private sector.

Mr. Yeo: Water fittings installed in a property must comply with the water byelaws. The byelaws set out requirements for the prevention of waste and contamination of water and regulate plumbing materials and installations. Water companies are responsible for their enforcement.

Mentally Ill Homeless People

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of capital funds available from his Department through the Housing Corporation for the provision of housing and care support for homeless mentally ill persons in London; and what steps he is taking or ensure that these funds are used to provide appropriate accommodation for these people.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation is making available up to £11·5 million of capital funding this year for the provision of housing accommodation in support of the Department of Health initiatives for homeless mentally ill people in London. These funds will be used by the Housing Corporation to support those housing association schemes which, in liaison with the authorities concerned, they judge will be most effective in providing for this client group.

Travellers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding problems created by gipsies/travellers during the last 12 months from (a) local authorities and (b) other sources other than those received as part of his consultative exercise.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has received some 670 letters from local authorities, hon. Members and members of the public during the past 12 months, excluding formal responses to the consultation paper issued by the Department in August last year.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the cost to local authorities of dealing with problems of gipsies/travellers in the last 12 months for which figures are available;

(2) what information he has of the number of attempts in the last 12 months to move gipsies/travellers; and whether any breakdown of the land ownership can be given in such cases.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many gipsies/travellers there are currently in England; how many are on official sites; how many on unofficial sites on (a) private land and (b) public land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The latest biannual count of gipsy caravans, collected from information provided by district and borough councils, found 12,810 gipsy caravans in England on 21 July 1993. A total of 8,408 caravans were on authorised sites, of which 2,976 were on private land and 5,432 on council land; 4,402 caravans were in unauthorised encampments, but the local authority returns do not distinguish whether the land was in public or private ownership.

Living over the Shops Initiatives

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority (a) the address, (b) the date it was approved by his officials, (c) the overall scheme cost, (d) the level of subsidy, (e) the date of completion, (f) the date of withdrawal and (g) the letting date for each completed property for which a supplementary credit approval has been agreed by his Department under the living over the shops initiatives since the inception of the scheme.

Sir George Young: Not all the information requested is held by the Department. However, I have arranged for the information which is readily available to be placed in the Library.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what form of social cost-benefit analysis he has undertaken in order to justify the radioactive discharges and creation of nuclear waste resulting from the operation of THORP; if he will release this; and what other methods he has used to make the justification.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 15 December, Official Report, column 1094. Copies of the decision document which sets out in detail how the decisions were reached are in the House Library.

Parish Reviews

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the Local Government Act 1992 has had on the validity of circular 121/77.

Mr. Baldry: Under the provisions of section 13 of the Local Government Act 1992, the Local Government Commission is given powers, at the direction of the Secretary of State for the Environment, to undertake parish reviews. These powers replace those the Local Government Act 1972 conferred on district councils and the Local Government Boundary Commission, on which Department of the Environment circular 121/77 gives guidance. Circular 121/77 continues to reflect established policy.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instruct the commission for local government reorganisation to cease referring to circular 121·77 in investigations and reports.

Mr. Baldry: No. Department of the Environment circular 121/77 on parish reviews continues to reflect current policy.

Council Tax

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the recommended maximum waiting times for hearing an appeal at a council tax tribunal.

Mr. Baldry: Valuation tribunals are independent judicial bodies, and it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to make recommendations of this kind. However, the tribunals are very conscious of the need to process appeals as expeditiously as is consistent with a full and fair consideration of the merits of each case.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the total numbers of chairpersons and non-executive board members of (a) housing action trusts and (b) urban development corporations.

Sir George Young: Currently, the established housing action trusts have in total 55 board members, including chairmen; the urban development corporations have 135 board members, including chairmen.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of correspondence received by (a) his Department and (b) each of his Department's agencies receives (i) an acknowledgement within five days and (ii) a substantive reply within 15 days.

Mr. Gummer: My Department aims to reply to letters within 15 days, and to send an acknowledgement if a full reply cannot be given within this time. Some 1·5 million letters are received annually at the Department's headquarters. Work is now under way to ensure the systematic monitoring of performance in replying.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to public funds of the change of name of the Urban Regeneration Agency to English Partnerships; and if he will make a statement on the reason for the change.

Mr. Baldry: The name English Partnerships reflects the fact that the agency will operate in the whole of England and in partnership with the public, private and voluntary sectors. The adoption of this operating name did not entail any increase in its preparatory costs.

Public Meetings

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requirements are imposed on housing action trusts, housing associations and urban development corporations, to hold meetings in public of the main governing body, any committees, and any sub-committees; and what rights of access the public have to agendas, minutes, and reports of such bodies, committees and sub-committees.

Mr. Gummer: No requirements are imposed on housing action trusts or urban development corporations. However, as a matter of policy and in the light of citizens charter commitments, most housing action trust board, committee and sub-committee meetings are open to the public. Agendas, reports and minutes are available to the public on request. Most urban development corporations admit the public to discussions on land use planning matters unless they are commercially confidential issues. Similarly, the proceedings of some meetings of housing action trusts may not be open to the public, for example where personnel matters, audit and commercially confidential matters are discussed.

The Housing Corporation has the statutory responsibility to fund and supervise registered housing associations. As part of its supervisory role, the corporation requires associations to provide a wide range of information on a regular basis covering the performance and management of associations. These returns are available to members of the public and may be viewed at the corporation's headquarters.

Blue-collar Services

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to modify the arrangements for retendering of blue-collar services following his decision to accelerate the programme for reviewing the structure of English counties and districts.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's announcement to the House on 29 March 1993, Official Report, column 56, that shire counties and districts being reorganised following review by the Local Government Commission would not be required to continue compulsory competitive tendering —CCT—for manual services during the reorganisation period, was widely welcomed by local authorities. The acceleration of the commission's review programme requires some modification to these arrangements.

Our objective is that authorities should, wherever possible, continue to subject services to the pressures of competition which can bring so many benefits. However, we would not wish to see new authorities tied to inappropriate arrangement made by their predecessors.

I therefore intend that, for all high-value, long-term contracts, the exemption already announced should remain unchanged. This will commence when Parliament approves changes in an area and end 18 months after the new authority comes into being.

For short-term, low-value contracts, I have concluded that CCT should continue to apply throughout the reorganisation period. Tendering for this work is a matter of routine practice, and new authorities would not be hampered by continuing with arrangements made by their predecessors for a short period. I therefore intend that the exemption will not apply where the period over which work is to be carried out is less than 12 months or the value of that work is less than £200,000 per annum.

My officials have today written to the secretaries of the Association of County Councils and Association of District Councils giving further details of these modifications and those my right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction and I announced on 15 December for white-collar and housing management services, Official Report, columns 733-35. I will place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Housing Resources

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make an announcement about the distribution of housing resources for 1994-95.

Sir George Young: I am today announcing a number of decisions about the provision of resources for housing in 1994-95.

Local housing authorities will today receive their housing investment programme—HIP—allocations for 1994-95. They total some £1·5 billion. Within that, £1,038 million are general purpose allocations, or housing "annual capital guidelines". As last year, these have been calculated 40 per cent. on the basis of a statistical assessment of local housing needs, and 60 per cent. on a discretionary basis related to published criteria. The primary criterion has been the efficiency and effectiveness of local authorities in making use of capital resources to meet housing needs.

This year, for the first time, in addition to their bids for resources, local authorities have also been required to submit a separate housing strategy statement. Our aim is that these strategy statements should become important documents in their own right, setting out a planned framework for housing programmes looking at least three years ahead. They should present an all-embracing picture of the housing needs and resources of each area, covering not only the plans of the local authority, but also the contribution to be made by the private sector.

In general, the picture emerging from the bids and strategy statements this year is one of continuing improvements in performance by local authorities, both in the management of their own stock and in their enabling role. Housing strategies are now better researched and the analysis of local problems and opportunities is conducted on a sounder basis. Local authorities are acting in a more corporate manner, drawing on all the available sources of funding and using their enabling powers to meet needs in fields such as community care. Further efforts have also been made to involve private housing interests, tenants and residents in the development of housing strategies. Authorities are also making increased use of the private sector to assist them in meeting the needs of those accepted as homeless. My announcement of both the housing investment programme and approved development programme resources today also demonstrates how the housing programmes of local authorities and housing associations are being brought closer together.

Under the competitive HIP process, we have again been able to direct resources to a greater degree to local authorities who are best able to make use of them. I am glad to be able to publish today the names of the authorities that were judged the best performers in each region under the HIP process. All other authorities will have the assessment of their performance conveyed to them by the Department's regional offices. I am encouraged by the progress which many authorities have made this year, and hope that all authorities will continue to work for further improvements during 1994-95.

A further £288 million has been allocated for private sector renewal and housing defects in the form of "specified capital grant", to assist councils with their expenditure in these areas. As with the annual capital guideline allocations, 40 per cent. of these resources has been distributed on a statistical assessment of local needs, and 60 per cent. on a discretionary basis.

I am depositing tables in the Library of the House showing each authority's annual capital guideline and specified capital allocations. I am also depositing a list of the names of the authorities in each region who have been assessed as the best performers.

From 1 April 1994, estate action will be part of the single regeneration budget. Within the budget, £306 million will be available in 1994-95 for estate action schemes already under way. A further £67 million will be available for new schemes which will be approved under current estate action guidelines. Local authorities are today being notified of the outcome of their bids for resources for new schemes next year, as well as of the resources being provided for continuing schemes. I am placing a list of the new schemes in the Library together with tables showing the latest position on the distribution of resources between authorities for continuation schemes.

Turning to the housing revenue account subsidy determination for 1994-95, I can today announce the main results of our consultation exercise.

I intend to confirm the proprosals to increase management and maintenance allowances by 4 per cent. overall and to continue to distribute the increase through a system of targets reflecting authorities' relative need to spend.

For rent guidelines, I am confirming the proposal for an average increase of 7·5 per cent. This will result in an average increase in guideline rents of £2·20 per week over those which apply this year, with a range of between £1·50 and £2·90 for individual councils, bringing the national average guideline rent to £31·60. Responsibility for setting actual rents remains with individual local authorities. Housing benefit will normally meet the whole of any rent increase for tenants receiving it.

The Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1994-95 represents its fourth largest budget since housing association grant—HAG—was introduced in 1974. Overall, gross capital expenditure will amount to over £1·5 billion in 1994-95. Some £600 million is available for new schemes to start next year, of which £400 million will be for new homes for sale or rent.

The Housing Corporation is confident that this programme will enable housing associations to provide some 58,000 new homes in 1994-95, bringing the total over the three years from 1992-93 to 1994-95 to 178,000. This more than fully meets our manifesto commitment to provide 153,000 homes over this period, and compares extremely well with the 70,300 new homes provided over the preceding three years, 1989-90 to 1991-92.

The Housing Corporation estimates that, because of reductions in procurement and borrowing costs and increases in efficiency, coupled with the growing proportion of the programme targeted at tenants incentive scheme grants and other cost-effective home ownership initiatives, it should still achieve the estimate it made a year ago of at least 154,000 completions over the three years 1993-94 to 1995-96.

The Housing Corporation has discussed priorities with local authorities before reaching decisions on new allocations to housing associations active in each area. These have been targeted on the basis of a statistical assessment of needs, an assessment of the enabling performance of the authority itself, and the value for money of bids. In this context, anticipated local authority contributions of discounted land or local authority HAG have increased by 15 per cent. over 1993-94. This, together with increased competition for resources and the reduction in grant rates, has led to an average HAG cost per unit which is 13 per cent. lower within the rented programme than the equivalent figure for 1993-94.

A key aim of the 1994-95 approved development programme is to make the most productive use of the existing housing stock: funding for the tenants incentive scheme has been increased and do-it-yourself shared ownership will continue to be targeted principally at local authority and housing association tenants, thus freeing up more existing tenancies for new lettings; the mini-HAG programme for short-life housing has been increased to its highest ever level; within the mixed and publicly funded rented programme, 19 per cent. of 1994-95 allocations are for rehabilitation which represents an increase on the last few years; and the major repairs and miscellaneous works programme has been allocated £75 million, which represents the second highest figure ever.

Planning Application Fees

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the level of planning application fees to increase; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Fees for planning applications will increase by 15 per cent. from 13 January 1994 and a further 15 per cent. from 3 January 1995. These increases represent another important step towards applicants meeting the full costs incurred by local planning authorities in determining planning applications. Fees remain a very small proportion of overall development costs, and we believe it is right that applicants, rather than the community, should pay for this service. Amending regulations, approved by both Houses, have now been made.

For the future, it is our intention to bring forward legislation, when parliamentary time is available, to allow local planning authorities to set their own fees. A consultation paper will be issued in due course. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland proposes similar arrangement for planning application fees north of the border.

Meanwhile, I have decided that the results of research carried out for my Department by Price Waterhouse on local planning authorities' costs in determining planning applications should be published. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The researchers found that some authorities do not have the procedures in place to establish the costs of processing applications. I expect that by the end of the financial year 1995-96, all authorities should be able to identify these costs as a prerequisite to setting their own fees.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest valuation of land held by each of the urban development corporations.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The urban development corporations are required to include in their annual accounts and publish in their annual report, the value of their development assets, which comprise both land and buildings at the lower of cost or net realisable value. At 31 March 1993, these were as follows:

	£ million
London Docklands	39·109
Central Manchester	2·886
Trafford Park	19·250
Leeds	7·507
Sheffield	13·756
Merseyside	27·855
Bristol	13·787
Black Country	47·265
Birmingham Heartlands	0·281
Teesside	31·387
Tyne and Wear	33·866

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing in 1992-93 prices, the gross public spending for each year since 1990-91 and the projected expenditure for each year to 1995-96 for each executive non-departmental public body —NDPB—sponsored by his Department, as listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The table shows, for all 32 executive NDPBs currently sponsored by my Department, gross expenditure outturn for past years, estimates for 1993-94 and NDPBs' provisional plans for future years, in 1992-93 prices. NDPBs' most recent plans available to the Department are those submitted in summer 1993.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those responsible for making appointments of (a) chairs and (b) members of the boards to each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 December 1993]: Appointments to the Rural Development Commission are made by Her Majesty the Queen.

I am responsible for all appointments to the Department's other executive non-departmental public bodies except the following where responsibility is shared:

Joint Nature Conservation Committee

Seven of the 11 voting members are provided by English Nature, the Scottish and Welsh county councils and the Countryside Commission.

Letchworth Garden City Corporation

One each of the six members is appointed by Hertfordshire county council and North Hertfordshire district council respectively.

National Rivers Authority

Two of the 14 members are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and one by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

United Kingdom Eco Labelling Board

All members appointed jointly with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the appointments made to public bodies by his Department since April 1992 have been advertised.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 December 1993]: A vacancy for the post of local commissioner—local government ombudsman—was advertised early in 1993.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy regarding the use of executive search consultants in making appointments to public bodies; and if he will (a) list the appointments where such consultants have been used and (b) list the cost in each case since April 1992.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Executive search consultants may be used where this is considered necessary to identify suitable candidates for appointment.

Consultants were employed by my Department to assist with the selection of a local commissioner—local government ombudsman—earlier this year.

The total fee paid to the consultants was £21,810·93, including VAT. Public advertisements cost a further £17,704.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if will publish a table showing for each of the non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—sponsored by his Department, whether the public have a statutory right to (a) attend all board meetings and (b) inspect the minutes of the meetings.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 16 December 1993]: There is no statutory right for the public to attend board meetings or inspect the minutes for any of the executive NDPBs sponsored by the Department.

Water Charges

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the likely impact on water charges for each of the years 1994-95 to 1997-98 of the outcome of discussions on the implementation of the urban waste water treatment and bathing waters directives.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 16 December 1993]: We welcome the decision of the European Council that a large proportion of Community legislation on water should be recast to make it consistent with the principle of subsidiarity. The Commission must now bring forward proposals for new and revised directives for consideration by the European Parliament and the Council of Ministers. They would not become law until agreed by the Council of Ministers. It is too early to assess the impact of any changes on water charges, but arrangements which allow more flexibility to member states should reduce costs.

Environment Council

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 15 December.

Mr. Yeo: The Environment Council resumed its discussions on 15 December. I represented the United Kingdom. The Council agreed a common position on the packaging directive by qualified majority vote. The directive will set targets for member states for the recovery and recycling of packaging waste and will provide a framework which allows free circulation of packaging which meets essential requirements. The Council also adopted the decision agreed last March enabling the Community to ratify the United Nations framework convention on climate change. The United Kingdom strongly supports Community ratification, but abstained because of doubts about the choice of legal base.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 234

SESSION 1993–94

6th December, 1993—17th December, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
